"I'll cross that bridge when I come to it," he said.

At Brooklyn College, Mr. Carter told an enthusiastic audience of 1,500 people that the record of the F.B.I. was a "disgrace" when it "ought to be purer than Caesar's wife."

Later, in a packed church here in Philadelphia, he said that Mr. Kelley had been "caught having Government employees using tax money to decorate his home."

G.E. TO PAY 3 MILLION FOR DUMPING PCB'S INTO UPPER HUDSON

Company Also Agrees to Help State Finance Research to Eliminate Pollutant From the River

By LESLIE MAITLAND

General Electric, in a negotiated settlement with the Department of Environmental Conservation, has agreed to pay $3 million toward cleansing the Hudson River of highly toxic PCB's that it dumped there. The company has also agreed to pay $1 million for research on ending the problem.

Under the agreement, which neither exonerates nor blames the company for polluting the upper Hudson River, the state will also set aside $3 million to help eliminate the chemical—polychlorinated biphenyls—from the water.

The Department of Environmental Conservation is expected to announce the terms of the agreement—regarded as a historic event by a number of conservationists because it severely penalizes a major polluter—in a news conference in Albany today.

Two Decline to Discuss Terms

Martin Wasser, an assistant to Peter A. A. Berle, Commissioner of Environmental Conservation, declined yesterday to discuss the terms of the agreement, as did a spokesman for General Electric.

Sarah Chasis, a lawyer with the Natural Resources Defense Council, a public-interest law firm that represented several of the conservation groups acting as intervenors in the case, and participated in the negotiations also refused to discuss the terms of the agreement.

But she said that the chief concerns of the environmentalist intervenors had been to assure the cleanup of the Hudson River and to establish a precedent for holding polluters responsible for the consequences of their toxic discharges.

Result of Hearings

The settlement is a result of quasi-judicial hearings ordered by the Department of Environmental Conservation and culminates months of haggling among the department, G.E. and the intervening environmental associations. It also puts to an end, at least for now, an issue that had attracted adverse attention to General Electric.

Last February, Prof. Abraham D. Sofaer of the Columbia Law School, the hearing officer in the case, found the company had violated New York State's water-quality standards by its PCB discharges from capacitor plants at Fort Edward and Hudson Falls, north of Albany. The discharges of the pollutant had come to public attention last fall, after high levels of PCB's were found in fish from the Hudson River.

Last April, the conflict led to the resignation under pressure of Mr. Berle's predecessor, Ogden R. Reid, whose uncompromising stance on the G.E. case

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of West Germany during their news conference held in Hamburg yesterday.

Kissinger Expected to Fly to Africa Next Week to Renew Negotiations

Special to The New York Times

HAMBURG, West Germany, Sept. 7—Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger is expected to fly to southern Africa next week to resume attempts to negotiate solutions to the white-black conflicts in Rhodesia and South-West Africa.

Mr. Kissinger said here today that he had received an invitation from President Julius K. Nyerere of Tanzania to return to the area. [In Dar es Salaam, a spokesman for President Nyerere said that Tanzania had not invited Mr. Kissinger but did welcome the idea of a visit by him, Reuters reported.]

Although privately Mr. Kissinger and his aides said they were pleased that the black African leaders who have just concluded a meeting in Dar es Salaam had not taken actions that would have precluded an invitation to the Secretary, publicly he delayed formal acceptance.

At a news conference here after he briefed the West German Chancellor, Helmut Schmidt, Mr. Kissinger said that he wanted to receive a report first from William E. Schaufele Jr., Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, who was sent today to Dar es Salaam to find out from Mr. Nyerere the results of the closed-door meeting held there.

While Mr. Kissinger—who flew here this afternoon from Paris—was conferring with Mr. Schmidt at a guest house, initial reports were received by Mr. Kissinger's party from diplomatic sources and from news agencies about the results of the meeting in Tanzania, at which leaders of five black African nations, together with various nationalist groups, tried to arrive at agreed positions on Rhodesia

AFRICAN TALKS CLOSE WITHOUT ENDING RIFT OF BLACK RHODESIANS

DISCUSSIONS REPORTED HEATED

Feud Became Main Topic at Parley of 5 Presidents Held to Develop Policy on Minority Regimes

By JOHN DARNTON

Special to The New York Times

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania, Sept. 7—The Presidents of five black African countries ended two days of talks here today without achieving their objective of reconciling the feuding factions of Rhodesia's black nationalist movement.

The meeting had been called to work out a common strategy for dealing with the white minority Governments of Rhodesia and South Africa and the South African administration of South-West Africa. But attempts to reconcile the two factions of the African National Council of Rhodesia turned into the main item on the agenda.

No joint communiqué was issued after the meeting attended by Presidents Julius K. Nyerere of Tanzania, Kenneth D. Kaunda of Zambia, Samora Machel of Mozambique, Agostinho Neto of Angola and Seretse Khama of Botswana. A spokesman for the Tanzanian Government said only that the five heads of state had agreed "to further intensify the armed struggle" in Rhodesia.

Differences Are Reported

However, sources who attended the sessions said that rival Rhodesian nationalist representatives had met with the five Presidents together and separately, that discussions were sometimes heated and that the factions were nowhere near patching up their differences.

The rift between the Rhodesian nationalist factions, a moderate one headed by Joshua Nkomo that is based in Rhodesia, the other headed by Bishop Abel Muzorewa and based outside the country, has its origins in ancient tribal animosities and power struggles between leaders.

The split reappeared in March when the Nkomo faction agreed to negotiate with the Rhodesian white minority Government of Prime Minister Ian D. Smith and the Muzorewa faction condemned the move. The negotiations eventually broke down.

Two Factors Involved

The bishop's faction is made up largely of a former political party called the Zimbabwe African Nationalist Union. Mr. Nkomo's supporters came from a group called the Zimbabwe African People's Union. Zimbabwe is the nationalist name for Rhodesia.

Earlier this year an 18-member high command, with nine from each faction, was set up to oversee guerrilla fighting against the Smith Government. The forces of the bishop's faction gained the ascendancy, and in June fighting between the two sides was reported in camps in Tanzania.

Robert Mugabe, a former guerrilla field commander who is in self exile in Mozambique, said here today that all forces of Mr. Nkomo's faction had withdrawn from the fighting inside Rhodesia and that Mr. Nkomo had promised the five

5 LAWYERS INDICTED IN SELLING OF BABIES

Jersey Jury Charges Attorneys in Conspiracy on Adoptions

By JOSEPH F. SULLIVAN

Special to The New York Times

HACKENSACK, N.J., Sept. 7—A Bergen County grand jury indicted lawyers in New York, Illinois and Michigan today on charges of conspiring with a New Jersey lawyer to sell babies for as much as $8,000 to childless New Jersey couples.

Joseph C. Woodcock, the Bergen County Prosecutor, said the indictments against the five lawyers and two other persons followed a nine-month investigation that also involved information gathered by grand juries sitting in Morris and Passaic Counties.

Mr. Woodcock said the investigation was started when a probate judge referred an adoption case to his office for investigation early this year. He said the cases uncovered thus far by the grand jury represented only the "tip of the iceberg" as far as illegal placements were concerned. He said he believed that most of the hundreds of private adoptions approved by New Jersey courts each year were tainted.

However, he emphasized that no attempt would be made to overturn any adoptions or disturb relationships between the babies and their adoptive parents.

Edward Terner of West Orange, the state's best-known adoption lawyer and one of several attorneys who helped draft New Jersey's adoption statutes when they were last overhauled in 1954, was named in four of the five indictments and

Milan's La Scala Makes U.S. Debut

By MOLLY IVINS

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7—Milan's renowned La Scala Opera made its historic debut in America here tonight before an audience that was both glittering and demanding.

The glitter came from Washington's social élite, who regarded La Scala's performance as the start of the capital's social season. The critical edge was supplied by members of the Music Critics Association, which had timed its convention here because of La Scala's appearance.

The festivities were delayed for 52 minutes, from 7:30 to 8:22 o'clock, when the platform that lowers the orchestra into the pit failed to operate. Martin Feinstein, executive director of the center, appeared on stage and explained, as stagehands and technicians worked on the platform's mechanism, that such a thing had never happened before.

Military Windfall for West

Landing of MIG-25 in Japan Is Opportunity For Examination of Advanced Soviet Weapon

By DREW MIDDLETON

The United States and allied intelligence services regard expected access to the MIG-25 that a Soviet pilot flew to northern Japan on Monday as the most important East-West coup since the Russians shot down an American U-2 spy plane 16 years ago. Since then, the Israeli successes in the 1967 and 1973 wars with the Arabs have yielded a harvest of Soviet weapons, including the two main surface-to-air missile systems, the SAM-2 and the SAM-3, and the Soviet T-62 tank.

Military Analysis

Intelligence sources said, however, that the performance and guidance systems technology of these weapons had been fairly well known before they fell into Israeli hands. Access to the MIG-25 would be a "tremendous break" for the West, they added.

The MIG-25, these sources noted, is the most advanced Soviet interceptor-reconnaissance aircraft and access to its radar system, engines and fire-control system can only be compared to Soviet possession of an American F-14 or F-15 fighter. And the MIG-25's pilot will be available for questioning when, as Japanese authorities reported in Tokyo, he is transferred to the United States today. [Page 7.]

The Soviet plane, code-named Foxbat by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, is regarded as the fastest aircraft now deployed by either side, with a maximum speed of Mach 3.2. Mach 1 equals the speed of sound, which at sea level is about 740 miles an hour.

The aircraft is reported to have a service ceiling of 80,000 feet, which gives it unique capabilities as a reconnaissance aircraft. Its radar, operating from that height, has been used to gather information for Syria and Egypt in the Arab-Israeli war of 1973 and, more recently, over Iran.

Why the Shah Bought F-14's

United States officers say that the Shah's decision to purchase 80 American F-14 Tomcat fighters was a result of reconnaissance flights by Soviet MIG-25's over Iran. The Tomcat does not have a comparable ceiling or speed, but it carries the Phoenix missile, which, with a range of more than 200 miles, is believed to give the F-14 the capability to deal with the MIG-25.

The Soviet plane set a world speed record in September 1967, when it flew at 1,852.61 miles an hour. The record was broken by an American SR-71 last July at 2,016 miles an hour. This speed has

Brazilian Squatters' Inroads in Amazon Provoke Indi

By JONATHAN KANDELL
Special to The New York Times

RIO DE JANEIRO, Jan. 3—A new conflict between Brazilian Indians and whites in which two settlers have been killed has been provoked in the Amazon in recent weeks as 5,000 poor white squatters have invaded land set aside for the Surui tribe.

The tribe, numbering several hundred Indians in 300,000 acres in the southeastern part of the territory of Rondonia, can count on the support of 2,000 Indians in other tribes in the area.

As a result of the conflict, missionaries, anthropologists and Brazilian Government officials have issued warnings that an Indian-white war may break out in the territory.

The Government has agreed to let the squatters remain in the occupied Indian lands until they collect their harvest next year. But the Indians and their supporters believe, on the basis of past experience, that the deadline will be extended indefinitely and that an armed struggle will break out, ending in the inevitable defeat of the Amazon tribes.

Old American West Recalled

The land struggles, recalling the old American West, are going on in the vast Amazon basin, stretching over an area two-thirds of the size of the continental United States.

The Brazilian Indian population, thought to number more than 2 million before the arrival of the white man, is now estimated at 100,000.

The Indians who have remained in the jungles find their hunting grounds constantly diminishing. Those who have voluntarily moved or have been forced to move to reservations must make the difficult transition to a sedentary agricultural life, often under pervasive Government indifference, often facing the outright hostility of white settlers moving into virgin territories.

The situation is just as bleak throughout the continent. Most of the 20 million to 25 million Indians in Latin America live in numbing poverty, with diseases that wipe out almost half their infants and cut average life expectancy to fewer than 50 years. In such countries as Argentina and Chile, where Indians are heavily outnumbered by descendants of Europeans, Indians' problems rank low on government priority lists; their very existence is often denied by the urban middle class.

Torture and Jailings in Paraguay

In nations where the Indian populations are larger and their assimilation is unquestioningly equated with progress, it is widely assumed that they will incorporate themselves painlessly into modern society, intermarrying with people of mixed ancestry — mestizos — or even whites, and somehow finding employment on farms and in factories. Private efforts to assist Indians are often met with official resistance.

In Paraguay, the Government has imprisoned and tortured leaders of a private anthropological project aimed at providing medical, economic and legal help to the country's 80,000 Indians. The project's leaders were accused of Marxist subversion despite the fact that they were funded by a grant from the Inter-American Foundation, which in turn is financed by the United States Congress.

The New York Times/Marvin Howe

Indians of Brazil's Amazon basin, in spite of the efforts of missionaries to defend them, are seriously threatened by the expansion of white squatters.

In the jungles of eastern Paraguay, the Aches, a small tribe of Stone-Age hunters, is facing a losing battle to preserve a primitive culture and way of life from the onslaught of white men and culturally assimilated Indians. Until a few years ago, Aches were victims of man-hunters intent on slaughtering them, enslaving their infants or forcing them onto reservations. Like many other tribes, the Aches have been further decimated by epidemics contracted by their first prolonged contact with whites.

In Peru, which has the largest Indian population in South America, the military Government has tried to better the lot of the descendants of the Incas. Attempts have been made to recultivate ancient communal lands and to link impoverished rural communities with vast modern farms and ranches recently expropriated under the Government's agrarian reform program. A few educational programs have been started, using Quechua, the Indian language, rather than Spanish.

But many destitute Indians have abandoned their mountainous homelands and flocked to Lima, the capital, increasing the numbers of the unemployed who have virtually doubled the city's population over the last decade. Brazil has drawn more attention abroad over its treatment of Indians than any other Latin American country. This is partly because of the publicity surrounding the drive into the Amazon hinterlands, the most concerted effort by any nation to develop the interior. Concern abroad has also been aroused because Brazilian Indians have at times been accorded the worst kind of treatment on record in the Americas.

Atrocities Involved Agency

During the late 1960's, the country was shaken by disclosures that even the Indian Protection Service was deeply involved in atrocities against those under its charge. In 1968, a Government investigation into treatment of the Long Belts in the Mato Grosso documented cases of slaughter, intentional starvation, induced epidemics and sexual assault. Now the Indian Protection Service has been purged and renamed the National Indian Foundation. But with only a $12 million budget and few trained anthropologists, it has been woefully equipped to deal with its continent-sized problem.

According to officials of the foundation, their task has been complicated by conflicting policies carried out by other Government organizations in charge of land distribution, highway construction and settlement in Amazon areas occupied by Indians. At times there appears to be a conflict of opinion between ranking Government officials on whether the Indians should be protected and isolated on reservations or whether they shou grated.

"There is no such thing as ar Indian," said Gen. Ismarth Oliveira, the president of the "There are Indians who are in contact with society, but thi mean that they are integrat the conditions to integrate. It intention to speed up the proc gration."

Mauricio Rangel Reis, who, of the Interior, has control o dional Indian Foundation, has ipation. "We are going to cre of integrating the Indian pop Brazilian society as rapidly a Mr. Rangel Reis said in a m two years ago. "We believe th of preserving the Indian popu in its own habitat is very be unrealistic."

Kaunda

Kenneth David Kaunda is the first and only President of Zambia since the territory that was called Northern Rhodesia gained its independence from Britain in 1964.

Born April 28, 1924, the seventh child of an African missionary teacher, Mr. Kaunda—who neither drinks nor smokes—grew up in a family that loved the Bible, English literature and music. Ghandi is his political idol.

The father of nine children, he once supported his family as a teacher. He campaigned in Zambia's mining towns by playing the guitar and singing freedom songs he composed. He still plays and sings for his countrymen.

Considered a moderate and functioning as a moderating influence on southern African politics, he was once labeled a Communist, an anarchist and a potential terrorist by colonials who opposed his political rise. His slogan is "discipline, patience, loyalty and nonviolence."

Nyerere

A slender man with a toothbrush mustache who never lost the patient style of a dedicated teacher, Tanzania's President Julius Kambarage Nyerere is probably Africa's most widely respected national leader.

His national program is aimed at building "a new man" who will avoid selfishness and work for the good of his countrymen.

Many of his subordinates express a similar view. The corruption and nepotism that have plagued many other newly independent nations is far less obvious in Tanzania.

He has been a leader in Africa's opposition to colonial and minority white rule in Africa, welcoming the presence in his country of the Liberation Committee of the Organization of African Unity. A pan-Africanist, the 56-year-old father of five has also been in the forefront of welcoming blacks from the African diaspora.

Khama

Sir Seretse Khama, the 55-year-old President of Botswana, a mostly desert nation rich in copper and diamonds, first gained prominence in 1948 when he married an English clerk-typist, Miss Ruth Williams.

Tribal elders and British officials objected and the couple lived in exile in Britain until 1956, when he officially gave up his right to the title of Paramount Chief in Bechuanaland. Since then he was elected President.

The President has since walked a tight rope because his nation is situated at the northern end of South Africa and is dependent, to a great extent, on the South African rail system for exports and imports.

At the same time, he has been pressured by African guerrilla movements to allow them to cross his borders for forays into South Africa and South-West Africa.

The Oxford-educated leader has made no secret of his contempt for South Africa's racial policies. He refuses to post Botswana diplomats in Pretoria where, he maintains, they would be subject to humiliation.

Neto

A 54-year-old medical doctor, Agostinho Neto emerged as the leader of Angola after soldiers of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola drove the troops of two competing guerrilla movements out of the country with Cuban help earlier this year.

Lisbon educated, Dr. Neto is a poet whose writings about the lives of Africans under the Portuguese were termed seditious.

He was detained several times for his writings and for his activism with small secret groups of social activists opposed to Portuguese rule.

Critics who left the Popular Movement before the Angolan civil war have charged that Mr. Neto was "difficult" to get along with and often changed plans without notifying his subordinates. His supporters describe him as "brilliant."

The 54-year-old leader has termed the Angolan struggle as one of "class" not "race," and he has refused to join a pan-Africanist meeting in Tanzania, terming it "racist."

Machel

Samora Moises Machel has spent the greater part of his 42 years fighting a Portuguese rule in Mozambique, the nation he now leads as president.

As a youth, he saw that his father was paid less for farm produce than were white farmers. Later, he earned less as a medical assistant than did whites.

Recruited into the Mozambique Liberation Front in the early 1960s, he advanced quickly as a battle strategist and political organizer.

A slender and bearded man who has traveled widely and read extensively, Mr. Machel is warm in his personal relations and seeks to put strangers at ease. Many observers meeting him for the first time expressed doubt that he was a guerrilla leader.

The Mozambique President has attributed the Liberation Front successes to "a clear ideology." He told visitors last year: "We are not hysterical revolutionaries, the 10-year war has tempered us." The job in Mozambique today, he said, is to convert those "intoxicated" by capitalism, selfishness and individual ambition and to liquidate hunger and illiteracy.

African Talks Fail to Heal Split of Black Rhodesians

Presidents that he would attempt to get them to rejoin the struggle.

As the meeting of the Presidents at the Kilimanjaro Hotel broke up today, the Rhodesian nationalist representatives remained behind to discuss their differences.

Mr. Nkomo, who has been traveling outside Rhodesia for four months to build international support, sought here today to play down the gravity of the split, as he has secretly in the past.

"There was no discussion on unity," he remarked. "Unity was there. We've always been united."

But Bishop Muzorewa refused comment altogether. "Right now I'm sleepy," he said—a reference to the fact that his faction and Mr. Nkomo's met almost all night in a fruitless effort to come to agreement.

Guerrilla Group Attends

Also at the meeting were representatives of guerrilla fighters inside Rhodesia, sometimes called "The Third Force," a name that suggests a disillusionment with the leadership of both Mr. Nkomo and Bishop Muzorewa.

Some contend that as the Rhodesian fighting intensifies, the recognized nationalist politicians will become increasingly irrelevant and new leaders will emerge from among the guerrillas.

Recently, according to reliable sources both Mr. Nkomo and Bishop Muzorewa have reportedly been unable to obtain permission to visit the guerrilla camps.

Some nations, like Nigeria, have made a point of funneling support money through the liberation committee of the Organization of African Unity so that it goes directly to the guerrillas.

One powerful advocate of dealing directly with the guerrillas is President Machel of Mozambique, himself a guerrilla fighter who rose to power during the struggle with the Portuguese.

The five Presidents, leaders of so-called front-line countries, opened their sessions here yesterday, the day that talks on southern Africa ended in Zurich between Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and the South African Prime Minister, John Vorster.

Mr. Kissinger has promised to involve the African Presidents in the proposals discussed with Mr. Vorster for a peaceful settlement of the conflicts in Rhodesia and South-West Africa, called Namibia by nationalists.

Mr. Kissinger's deputy, William E. Schaufele Jr., the Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, is due here tomorrow morning and will presumably meet with President Nyerere, whom the United States regards as critical to a settlement since he has good relations with both moderate and militant African heads of state.

A visit by Mr. Kissinger here next weeks is possible in what could turn into Midle Eastern-type shuttle diplomacy — between white and black Africa to defuse the volatile situation in southern Africa.

Kissinger Forges Ahead and Is Not Yet Ready to Call It Q

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN
Special to The New York Times

HAMBURG, West Germany, Sept. 7—Henry A. Kissinger was asked the other day aboard his Air Force jet whether time was not running out on his African peacemaking mission. The questioner had in mind the American election and the good chance that no matter who wins in November, there will be a new Secretary of State.

Mr. Kissinger's reply was oblivious to those considerations. "Yes," he said, "time is running out. If we can't get negotiations started in Rhodesia by the end of the year, it will be a bloody mess."

The exchange underscored a fascinating aspect of Mr. Kissinger's last-minute push for a dramatic diplomatic achievement. Although everyone else in his entourage is aware that power may slip from his grasp at any time soon, he forges ahead, not yet ready to call it quits.

One of Mr. Kissinger's principal aides was eating lasagna in an Italian restaurant in London last night while his boss was off alone with Prime Minister James Callaghan. Analyzing Mr. Kissinger's success as a mediator, first with Arabs and Israelis and now with black and white Africans, the aide said, "In part Mr. Kissinger succeeds because he does it alone. He makes his moves, keeps them secret and springs a completed package when everything has been assembled."

Reminded that he was describing the kind of Lone Ranger figure that Jimmy Carter has gone out of his way to criticize, the aide said, "That's a good problem to think about." Given the same facts, the aide was asked, how would Mr. Carter handle the blacks and whites in Africa? "I think there is something good to be said for the Lone Ranger," was the reply.

Mr. Kissinger believes that certain criteria must be met to make agreement possible, and paramount is timing. The time must be right; there must be a sense of crisis so severe as to shake the parties from their positions.

In the Middle East, the October 1973 war was used to convince the Israelis and Egyptians that it was time to try negotiations. Even after the war began to recede in memory, he kept insisting—mostly to keep the Israelis in a negotiating mood—that without further accords another war was inevitable.

The Angola war and the increase in guerrilla activity against the white-dominated Government of Rhodesia have been used by Mr. Kissinger to convince the South Africans and, it is hoped, the white Rhodesians that unless they reach peaceful settlements soon, a conflagration may occur. He also urges negotiations on the black Africans, warning of the horrors of modern warfare.

This emphasis on impending disaster has led to criticism that Mr. Kissinger is making self-fulfilling prophecies—in effect, inviting further conflict. He denies that he encourages violence by warning about it, but it does seem that in his effort to dramatize a crisis, that is, make it more ripe for resolution, he allows himself some hyperbole.

The approach to negotiations, particularly in mediation, has probably won the Secretary of State the most praise from members of his staff. They say that once he is seized of an issue—currently it is Africa—he wants to know everything he can and to meet the various leaders and establish as intimate a relationship as possible to convince them of his even-handedness and sympathy. This requires considerable exchanges of messages, confidentiality and constant travel.

Mr. Kissinger then begins what is regarded by his aides as the most difficult stage: analyzing positions with all sides and convincing each in the first stage of negotiation per its demands and under problems of the others.

When the initial proposals terproposals are submitted th Kissinger, he passes them on tahly comments on them, te side that he knows that a par mand would be completely able but suggesting that if it fied somewhat it might be a

Meanwhile, he and his a up a synthesis of the two and offer discreet compromi tions.

This pattern, followed in tian-Israeli and Syrian-Israe tions, will have to be modifi African shuttle that is due to week. There will be a variet pendence and tribal groups with in addition to govern Kissinger is already trying black Africans to unity their not only to make it easier t but to reduce the number he must visit.

New Africa Trip by Kissinger Likely and South-West Africa, the two most potentially explosive areas in southern Africa.

The initial reaction was that the information was too scanty and that Mr. Kissinger should wait for Mr. Schaufele's report before committing American prestige irrevocably to an African shuttle operation to work out arrangements for negotiated solutions to the problems of Rhodesia and South-West Africa, which is known also as Namibia.

This morning Mr. Kissinger discussed Africa and other matters with President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing in Paris. After his news conference here, Mr. Kissinger headed for Washington where he plans to stay until next Sunday or Monday, when he will fly to Africa unless the report from Mr. Schaufele is so negative as to make such a mission inadvisable.

At a joint news conference with Mr. Kissinger, Mr. Schmidt, now in the throes of a national election campaign, endorsed Mr. Kissinger's African initiatives and gave guarded approval to the tentative plan being worked on for a consortium of Western countries to supply aid to southern Africa, mostly to Rhodesia, as an incentive to a diplomatic solution.

The aid package, which Mr. Kissinger has discussed with British officials in recent months, and with Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa in Zurich in talks that ended yesterday, would have participation from Western European countries as well as the United States.

It would have two aims—to help blacks in Rhodesia in a peaceful assumption of power and to encourage whites to remain in Rhodesia and keep their skills available to the country. Some aid, however, would be given to people who seek to emigrate.

PARIS, Sept. 7—President Giscard d'Estaing told Mr. Kissinger today that France would join an effort of the "international community" to ease the transition for whites living in Rhodesia.

Vorster Briefs Cabinet on Talks

Special to The New York Times

JOHANNESBURG, Sept. 7 — Prime Minister John Vorster returned to South Africa today and immediately briefed his Cabinet on the outcome of his weekend talks in Zurich with Secretary Kissinger.

The Prime Minister, looking tired after the 12-hour overnight flight from Europe, made only cryptic comments to reporters at the airport here. He was driven directly to Pretoria, the capital, where he presided at the weekly Cabinet meeting.

Mr. Vorster described his talks with Mr. Kissinger as "successful" but gave no details. However, his statement that the talks had established "a good basis for further negotiations" was seen as a reference to the possibility of Mr. Kissinger's making an early visit to southern Africa.

Corsicans Blow Up a French Plane In Insurgent Drive for Home Rule

AJACCIO, Corsica, Sept. 7 (Reuters)—Corsican militants favoring home rule today blew up an Air France airliner parked at Ajaccio airport, police sources said.

The Boeing 707 was empty and no one was hurt, the sources said. Witnesses said seven masked men had placed explosives on the aircraft after forcing its crew to park it in an isolated area of the airport far from buildings.

Two loud explosions were heard as far away as Ajaccio, four miles from the airport. The aircraft burst into flames, the witnesses said.

[Eighty persons were arrested, according to local police reports quoted by The Associated Press.]

Earlier, several hundred demonstrators clashed with the police and then blocked the runway at the airport with trucks. One policeman was injured in the clash. The demonstrators were demanding the release of a leader arrested last week.

This French Mediterranean island has been the scene of agitation since a clash last year in which three policemen were killed.

New Relationship Is Sought

A part of the French nation since it was captured from the Genoan Republic in 1768, Corsica today is at a crossroads. An autonomist movement demanding a new economic and political relationship with Paris made headlines on Aug. 22, 1975, when a band of insurgents seized a winemaking establishment at Aleria on the east coast. The action was to protest what many of the islanders had long considered to be the economic, social and cultural discrimination practiced by the French Government. It was intended to demonstrate the extent to which absentee landlords and foreigners controlled the economy.

The Association of Corsican Patriots, a legally constituted body that leads the autonomist movement, has dimissed concessions by Paris as "half-measures, false solutions and promises, promises." Marcel Bartoli, the organization's secretary general, has said, alluding to the Jacobins, an egalitarian, terrorist group in the French Revolution of 1789:

"French Jacobin centralism is the enemy. We are fighting for a sacred cause—to preserve the identity of the Corsican people."

The island has a population of 240,000 people compared with 300,000 at the turn of the century. The loss has been attributed to the departure of young people because of a lack of economic opportunity.

Ajaccio, the capital of Corsica, is the birthplace of Napoleon, who integrated the island into the French nation.

Military Windfall for the West not yet been approved by the Fedération Aéronautique Internationale in Paris.

The MIG-25 has a rawboned aspect in flight because its slim fuselage blends into two huge rectangular air-intake trunks that serve the twin engines.

The plane has four visible attachments for air-to-air missiles. When used as an interceptor, it is armed with four AA-6 missiles, code-named Acrid by the Atlantic alliance. These missiles have a launch weight of 1,870 pounds, including a warhead weighing 220 pounds.

According to the Strategic Air Command, the MIG-25, in its interceptor version, is the most potent weapon in the Soviet air defense force of 2,600 aircraft. In view of its speed, altitude and weapons, it is viewed as a serious threat to the B-52's, which make up the bulk of the American strategic bombing service.

Reason for B-1 Project

The MIG-25's capabilities, the sources said, are one reason why the Air Force wants to push forward with the development of the B-1 bomber, which is faster than the B-52 and can operate efficiently at low levels, which the MIG-25 cannot do.

The intelligence services hope to learn more about the MIG-25's engines, radar and fire-control system while it is in Japanese hands.

Lieut. Viktor I. Belenko, the Soviet pilot, it is hoped, will provide Western intelligence with information about the deployment of the MIG-25's with the Soviet Far East. The presence of these planes in that area, one source said, gives the Soviet Union an advantage over the Chinese and Japanese air forces and a slight edge over the United States in the northwest Pacific.

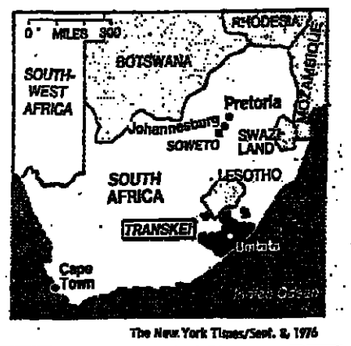
Transkei, as It Prepares for Independence, Finds Itself to Be Outcast Among Nations

By JOHN F. BURNS
Special to The New York Times

UMTATA, South Africa, Sept. 6—When the bull-crested banner of the Transkei is raised here on Oct. 26, signifying the independence of Africa's newest country, the band will strike up "Nkosi Sikelel i Afrika," or "God Bless Africa." But Africa, and most of the world, will be looking the other way.

The new country, carved out of South Africa, will cover 14,300 square miles, making it nearly as big as Denmark. It will have a population of three million, comparable to that of Israel. Its terrain, as beautiful and fertile as any in Africa, will be enhanced by a 155-mile coastline on the Indian Ocean. Compared with many countries of the third world, its economic potential will be strong.

The Transkei, however, will be a pariah. Already, its black leaders are diplomatic lepers, shunned in Europe and North America, ridiculed in debate at the United Nations. By present indications, the only foreign dignitaries who will attend the independence celebration in Umtata are the ones at the heart of the territory's diplomatic problms, the white rulers of South Africa.



The New York Times/Sept. 8, 1976

Diplomatic quarantine has not, however, dampened the determination of South Africa or the Transkei to make the celebrations a gala occasion. Construction crews are working overtime to complete dozens of new buildings designed to turn this once-sleepy market town into a credible national capital.

A new multistory government complex towers high above every other building in town. A few miles away herdsmen have had to abandon traditional grazing grounds to make way for a new jet airport and army base.

For Prime Minister John Vorster, the fluttering of the blue, white and orange flag above the bunga, or seat of the government, will represent the fulfillment of a political ideal. With the territory independent, he will have a showcase for his policy of separate development, which hinges on the creation of a series of ethnic ministates like the Transkei.

In its old guise, apartheid, South African policy was largely a matter of subordinating blacks. When this became indefensible, the Government added a compensatory dimension by offering blacks emancipation in areas called homelands, or bantustans, carved out of the old tribal domains.

When the Government carried the policy to its logical extension in 1973, offering the homelands independence, the Transkei accepted. Of the eight other territories only one, Bophutatswana, agreed to follow suit. The remainder have rejected nationhood, demanding equal rights for their citizens in South Africa as a whole.

The Organization of African Unity has demanded that the world shun the Transkei, on the ground that recognition would constitute acceptance of apartheid. The territory's leaders have countered by arguing that for three million of South Africa's 18 million blacks, at least, independence signifies escape from racial humiliation.

Already apartheid is bad memory for most Transkeians. "Europeans only" signs have been taken down in post offices, hotels and bars, and hand loosely, decrepit and upside down, at many other places once barred to blacks, including some of the best beaches along the coast.

The Transkeians have also made much of historical argument. They point out that the Transkei existed as loosely organized tribal community as early as the 16th century, and that this territorial integrity was acknowledged by special political arrangements from the time that the British annexed the territory in 1879.

Chief Kaiser Matanzima, scheduled to become prime minister at independence, notes that similar historical antecedents led the British to set aside three territories as protectorates when the Union of South Africa came into being in 1910. These protectorates subsequently gained independence in their own right as Lesotho, Swaziland and Botswana, all members of the United Nations.

The failure of the British to give the Transkei protectorate status—and thus set it on the road to uncontested independence—was, Chief Matanzima argues, a matter of political expediency. The Transkei, large, lovely, and encompassing some of the most coveted land in the country, was too rich a prize to deny the South Africans, he says.

The status of blacks living outside the homelands is a major factor in the diplomatic equation, for the theory of separate development holds that each of them—10 million in all—belongs to the homeland assigned to his ethnic or language group.

To Lose Citizenship

In the case of the Transkei, the law authorizing its independence specifies that all blacks with language ties to the territory will lose their South African citizenship on independence day. In theory, the provision strips 1.3 million blacks who speak Xhosa—the "click" language made famous by the singer Miriam Makeba—of any claim to rights as South Africans.

"We're in a real bind, aren't we?" says Mhlaleni Njisane, who is sche the Transkei's first ambassad Africa, probably the only dipl the country will have. "For u ence is a chance to break t of apartheid. If we reject it, t we reject apartheid, the sha last forever."

The philosophical and hist ments mean little to the va of Transkeians, who live, mc ancestors have domef or c thatched huts grouped toget rolling hills. Simple people, bed is often a blanket on a they end to defer, as they al to the opinions of their chie

y, Amid Outcry, Banishes 2 Accused Men to Island

Special to The New York Times

Sept. 7 — Two neo-Fascists with bombing a Milan bank ars ago were sent today to forced on a tiny island off the Tuscan er having been released from jail ic. Sixteen people died in the ansfer of the two men, Giovanni and Franco Freda, came after of controversy throughout Italy w setting a four-year limit on a defendant may be held in nding trial.

w was passed for the benefit of another man accused of the same crime, Pietro Valpreda, a ballet dancer and declared anarchist. Mr. Valpreda was arrested on Dec. 16, 1969, four days after a bomb exploded in the National Bank of Agriculture in Milan. He was released from jail three years later, the first beneficiary of the legislation.

Critics this week have charged that the law, instead of protecting the rights of the accused, has been used to permit Mr. Freda and Mr. Ventura to escape punishment for their crime. After seven years, the critics argue, it is unlikely that a trial will take place at all, or if it does that witnesses will be found to testify against the two.

Last week, the people of Giglio, an island off the Tuscan coast about 100 miles northwest of Rome that fills with tourists during the summer months, staged such a vigorous protest at the port where the two were to arrive that they were unable to land. The police escorted them back to the mainland to await further orders, while the public prosecutor declared that the inhabitants of the island could not legally refuse them goods and services.

Today, the two were sent by helicopter to the island under heavy guard.

Uganda Chief Said to Plan An Operation of 'Revenge' Against Neighboring Kenya

By FLORA LEWIS

Special to The New York Times

PARIS, Sept. 7—Intelligence information reaching Paris today said that President Idi Amin of Uganda has planned a "revenge operation" against Kenya.

According to the information, possible targets of one or more Uganda attacks were the international airport at Nairobi, the port of Mombasa and military installations.

The information was based on reports on two sessions of Uganda's National Defense Council, which President Amin addressed during the last week of August.

At the first session, it was said, he proposed an operation against Kenya because there was growing agitation against his rule in Uganda, and he thought an attack would restore his prestige. After an intense discussion, the reports said, the council prevailed on him to put off his original plan to launch the operation during the first week in September.

At a second meeting held later the same week, the report said, several members of the ruling group warned that an attack would provoke the economic strangulation of Uganda and a catastrophe. Uganda, which depends on deliveries across Kenya for fuel supplies, was hit severely when they were cut during the tension between Field Marshal Amin and the Kenyan Government after the Israeli raid to free hostages at the Entebbe airport last July.

According to the intelligence reports, the Uganda leader told his defense council that his prestige was at stake and that it was more important than the economic situation. Hhe finally managed to convince a small majority to support his plans, the reports said, and they decided that the operations would be scheduled for the second week in September.

British Union Leaders Are Heckled on Unemployment

By ROBERT B. SEMPLE Jr.
Special to The New York Times

BRIGHTON, England, Sept. 7—Some of the most powerful union leaders in Britain were jeered and heckled here today by demonstrators protesting the country's rising unemployment rate and what they regard as the labor movement's failure to demand stronger action from the Government.

The protesters did not seriously disrupt the second day of the annual meeting of the Trades Union Congress, a confederation of more than 10 million workers whose support is crucial if the Labor Government of Prime Minister James Callaghan is to have any hope of sustaining its present anti-inflation policies.

But while they did not interfere with the conference's working sessions, the protesters served as a reminder that there is growing unease about the Government's policy among Britain's rank-and-file workers. The protest followed by one day a decision by Britain's seamen to strike if necessary to demand more money than the present wage policy allows.

Inflation Rate Reduced

The essence of present Government economic policy is to hold all wage increases to a maximum of 4.5 percent, while at the same time holding the line and in some cases cutting Britain's spending and welfare programs.

The policy has helped cut Britain's inflation rate, still the highest of any industrialized Western nation, from nearly 30 to 15 percent in the last year. But unemployment exceeds 6.5 percent of the working population, the highest figure since World War II.

Tomorrow, the Government will seek a vote of confidence in the policy from the T.U.C. delegates here. Vigorous lobbying by union leaders is expected to carry the day for the Government's strategy without much difficulty, but there are signs that the consensus may not hold much longer.

For the last few days, youthful protesters have been marching into Brighton from the industrial centers of the north and from London. They gathered today outside the conference hall and confronted union leaders as they emerged for lunch. One organizer was jostled, and other high union officials ducked away from the protesters or were escorted through the crowd by the police.

Instant Lotteries Prove to Be Popular, With 12 States Besides New York Operating or Organizing T…

By PETER KIHSS

Instant lotteries, such as the offer for immediate payoffs in the gambling game on which New York State starts selling tickets today, have met with success and popularity, according to reports from other states.

All 12 other states with lottery programs were reported yesterday by the New York State Lottery Commission to have operated instant lotteries or to be organizing them.

Maryland, for instance, with a population of only 4.1 million, reported yesterday that its instant lottery, started last February, sold 20 million tickets at $1 apiece in five weeks. There were 2,140,210 winners of amounts ranging from $2 up to $10,000 as well as a chance at a drawing for $500 a week for life. Maryland is planning a new instant lottery for 1977 to add to its regular weekly lotteries and a daily numbers game.

Michigan yesterday announced its fourth instant lottery, with ticket sales to start on Tuesday. It has a device that Gus Harrison, the state lottery director, said might help get out the Michigan vote in the Presidential election Nov. 2.

The Michigan game is advertising "Every vote counts" and its top prize—beyond the possibility of instantly winning $2, $10, $500, $1,000 or $10,000—will be a payoff of $1 for every vote cast for the winning Presidential candidate in Michigan. The guaranteed amount to the winner: $1,250,000.

In New York, the state commission said yesterday that anyone who finds a winning $2 or $5 on his ticket after rubbing a coating off six boxes will be paid at once by the vendor.

A winner of $100, $500, $1,000 or $5,000 will go to a claims center to submit his ticket and get a receipt. His winnings will be mailed to him after about four weeks for validation and processing, the commission said. A "Jackpot" wording in all six boxes on the instant lottery card is paid $5,000 and given a chance for a later drawing for $1,000 weekly for life with a guaranteed $1 million.

John D. Quinn, director of the New York lottery, said New York ticket purchasers would have better than a 1-in-10 chance of winning something.

The popularity of the instant lotteries in Delaware resulted in the selling out of 1.5 million tickets in six weeks in a state with only 580,000 inhabitants. There have been two instant games—the first offering pay-offs up to $10,000 and the second up to $15,000 instantly, along with a final drawing for $1,000 a week for life with a guaranteed minimum of $300,000.

Henry O. Luther, executive director of New Jersey's lottery, said that if the new New York game is anywhere near as popular as New Jersey's that "It is bound to be successful."

New Jersey also sells instant lottery tickets for $1. Each ticket bears a picture of a former President and six inaugural years—the number of such years matching the President's actual inauguration determines a prize ranging from $3 to $10,000.

The ticket stub also has a historic scene, such as the signing of the Declaration of Independence or the first landing on the moon. The player gets a chart of 20 such scenes, and when he gets enough tickets to complete a vertical or horizontal column, as in a bingo game, his prize can range from $50 to $1,000.

A third incentive is a chance for a $1,000 weekly prize.

New Jersey also has a 50-cent weekly lottery—New York expects to reinstate a weekly lottery in December—and operates a "pick-it" version of the numbers game with plays of 50 cents to $5 through a limited number of dealers with electronic machines linked to a central computer in Trenton.

In its nearly six years, the New Jersey lottery has produced $260 to $300 million for public institutions and education.

Connecticut has a semiannual instant lottery that raised $6 million for education in its first operation late last year and another $6 million this year. The state's weekly 50-cent lottery, in operation for four years, has produced state revenues of $15 million a year.

Rhode Island has just run its first instant lottery, on which $1 purchasers rubbed off the top of the ticket to expose a number in a baseball and then the bottom portion showing runs in nine innings. If there were more runs than in the baseball number, prizes ranged from $20 to $50,000.

With a numbers game run by the lottery office as well, Rhode Island has grossed $2.2 million in sales during July and August. For the year ended June 30, the lottery produced $6.6 million in revenue for the state.

Massachusetts' latest instant lottery is selling a little more than $1 million in tickets a week. It was described by David Ellis, a lottery agency spokesman, as the biggest lottery money-maker currently. The state also runs a conventional weekly lottery and started a numbers game this year. Last year the combined programs grossed $94.6 million, of which $41 million was a net return for 351 cities and towns.

New Hampshire, which started its state lottery in 1964, has had six instant lottery games. The state also has weekly lotteries, and for the year ende… reported net revenue of $5,7… school districts, up from $4.2 … year ago.

PUBLIC NOTICE

STATE OF NEW YORK
DEPARTMENT OF ENVIRONMENTAL CONSERVATION
N.Y.C. Environmental Protection Administration in the Matter of the Petition of Department of Water Resources
Petition No. TW-22401-0092-WO-SP
PUBLIC HEARING NOTICE

Notice is hereby given that, pursuant to Article 25 (Tidal Wetlands) of the Environmental Conservation Law and the Rules and Regulations for Issuance of Permits under said Law (6NYCRR, Part 660), the Department of Environmental Conservation will cause a public hearing to be held in the office of the Department, Two World Trade Center, 81st Floor, Room 6126, New York, New York, 10047 on the 28th day of September, 1976, at 10:00 a.m. in the forenoon on that day for the purpose of:

(a) hearing all persons, corporations or civil divisions of the State of New York that may be affected by the execution of the plans of: N.Y.C. Environmental Protection Administration, Dept. of Water Resources, 40 Worth Street, New York, N.Y. 10013.

The project site is located in the East River in the northwest corner of the former Brooklyn Navy Yard. Petitioner proposes to conduct 20,000 cubic yards of dredging, construct a 1,200 ft. x 96 inch outfall line, construct a cofferdam, bulkheads and backfill, and construct a 70 mgd sewage treatment plant. Petitioner's hardship is based on the need to commence construction in the near future in accordance with existing funding commitments.

plans for which have been filed with the Tidal Wetlands Permit Agent, Department of Environmental Conservation, and are now in his office in New York, New York, where the same are open for public inspection; and

(b) affording the petitioner the opportunity to establish that the proposed project is not contrary to (1) the policy of the State to preserve and protect tidal wetlands, to prevent their despoliation and destruction and to give due consideration to the reasonable economic and social development of the State and (2) the provisions of Article 25 of the Environmental Conservation Law.

Further notice is hereby given that, pursuant to Title 5, Article 15 (Protection of Waters), Environmental Conservation Law and the Rules and Regulations for issuance of permits under said Law (6NYCRR, Part 608), the purpose of said hearing is also for determining whether said plans provide for the proper and safe construction of all work connected therewith, and whether execution of the proposal would adversely affect the health, safety, and welfare of the people of the State or the natural resources of the State.

The petitioner further requests that, pursuant to Section 401 (a) (1) of PL 92-500 (The Act), the project be certified that it will comply with applicable Federal effluent limitations or other limitations or standards under Section 301, 302, 306 or 307 of the Act.

All persons, corporations, or civil division of the State of New York, who have objections to the execution of said plans or wish to be heard either in favor of or opposed to such plan, in order to be heard thereon, must file a notice of appearance of such desire to be heard in writing and in duplicate specifying the precise grounds of support of or opposition to the petition with the Tidal Wetlands Permit Administrator at Two World Trade Center, 61st Floor, New York, New York 10047 on or before the 22nd day of September 1976. Filing for this purpose shall require actual receipt in the office of the Tidal Wetlands Permit Administrator. If no notices of appearance are filed, the hearing may be canceled.

U.S. Public Health Service Report Says the Agency's First Priority Is Controlling Escalating Medical C...

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7—The United States Public Health Service issued its five-year plan for health today and named as its first priority, controlling escalating health costs.

The third annual Forward Plan for Health this one for fiscal 1977-82, which outlines the future direction the nation should take to improve the health of Americans, calls for "a major attack on costs escalation," which went up 300 percent between 1965 and 1975.

The 137-page report like its predecessors continues to stress the need for individual action, such as moderation on smoking, drinking and eating as major factors in preventing illness.

But its economic emphasis including suggestions for cost controls that were in the Ford Administration's budget message this year and rejected by Congress, which makes this Forward Plan more an Administration statement of health policy than the public health statement that it has been in the past.

"It has by now become obvious that the only significant constraint on today's health care delivery system has nothing to do with technology, logistics, or resources: it is economic," said the report, which was released by Dr. Theodore Cooper, the Assistant Secretary for Health in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

It said that without some action to control health care inflation, "We will face severe restrictions in health care delivery and-or other public services—restrictions our nation should not tolerate." The report said that 20 states had to cut their Medicaid programs last year because of runaway costs.

Because of inflation in health services, which is growing about 50 percent faster than in the economy as a whole, and because of poor economic conditions, health services made up a larger portion of the Gross National Product in 1975 than it ever had before: 8.3 percent, up up from 7.7 percent the year before. Most of that increase came from price increases, rather than for more service to patients, the report said.

A growing amount of that increase came from the two large public health programs, Medicaid for the poor and Medicare for the elderly, which make up 60 percent of the Federal health budget.

The nation spent $118.5 billion for health care in fiscal year 1975, and that figure is expected to go up to $135 billion in 1976 "and could exceed $230 billion by 1980," the report said, even without enactment of a national health insurance program.

Inflation has been blamed as the reason why no national health insurance plan has been advanced by the Administration or Congress in 1975, even though both were pushing it in 1974.

The plan outlines many approaches to tackle the inflation problem—the preliminary steps to the enactment of national health insurance—including expanding coverage in public programs for outpatient and home health services, which are less expensive places to receive health care than in hospitals.

It calls for reallocating physician manpower by giving most medical scholarship aid to students willing to serve in geographic areas that need doctors. The bunching of doctors in large metropolitan areas creates a supply that patients use, regardless of need, the report said, and it calls for the creation of patient education programs to counteract the practice.

The plan supports, in theory, reforms in the Medicaid and Medicare programs, sponsored by the Senate Finance Committee, including encouraging doctors who participate in Medicare to accept Government payment levels as payment in full.

Can a 24 year old junior executive shop in the same store as her boss?

Women's fashion has never really been a matter of age.

Mostly, it's a function of taste, lifestyle, and your state of mind.

The important thing is that you can find things that suit you personally, while being very fashionable. And the trick is to find a store that understands what you want, and carries it.

For years, Bonds has been one of America's most popular men's stores.

But what you may or may not know, is that it has also been one of America's most fashionable women's stores. As the clothing you see here amply demonstrates.

The Murray Meisner 2-piece dress has a zip-back overblouse and scarf. It's 100% polyester, and comes in green multi-print, sizes 10-18.

It's yours for $34.

The 3-piece corduroy pantsuit is Hunter green, 100% cotton, in sizes 5-13. It's made by Oxford Circus, and we have it for only $54.

Can a 24 year old junior executive shop in the same store as her boss?

LOUISVILLE SCHOOLS REOPEN PEACEFULLY

Blacks and Whites Bused Without Incident—Omaha, Dayton, Ohio, and Milwaukee Also Calm

By United Press International

Nearly 51,600 black students and white students were bused without incident yesterday from neighborhood schools in Louisville, Ky., Omaha, Dayton, Ohio, and Milwaukee for a better classroom racial balance. Boston officials hoped to continue the peaceful busing pattern today.

Schools in the Louisville area reopened peacefully after a Labor Day weekend in which antibusing protests resulted in the police's use of tear gas to break up demonstrations, as well as 28 arrests and a possible busing-related school bombing.

Officials said that about 20,000 students had been peacefully bused in the Louisville area.

A fleet of 150 buses and vans in Omaha transported about 11,000 students for integration purposes. The main problem in Omaha was that some buses ran slightly behind schedule.

14,000 Students Bused in Dayton

In Dayton, about 14,000 students were bused in the third day of Ohio's first school-busing program.

Confusion over some school bus stops was the only problem, according to the Dayton School superintendent, John Maxwell.

In Milwaukee, 6,600 students, more than 90 per cent of them black, were bused to new schools in the first stage of an integration plan drafted in response to a Federal court order.

In Boston, city officials were cautiously optimistic for a trouble-free opening of schools today.

"There can be no dispute that the past two years have been long and arduous ones," Mayor Kevin H. White said. "We have undergone a tremendous social change and such things are never easy."

"I feel there will be less racial tension," said John J. McDonough, chairman of the Boston School Committee, the elected board which oversees the schools.

Teachers' Strikes Break Out

Teachers' strikes that have signaled the return to school in recent years broke out again in numerous cities. Teachers' spokesmen expected even more strikes this year because of cutbacks in school budgets.

Teachers went on strike Tuesday in Seattle, Manchester, N.H., and Buffalo. In Boston, teachers voted down a contract offer but held off on a walkout until at least October.

A National Education Association spokesman said that there could be more trouble ahead this year because more teachers' contracts remained unsettled than usual.

"Tight money and all of the factors which led to a record number of teacher strikes for the 1975-76 school year are the same," Terry Herndon, the association's executive director, said. "And the incredible number of unsettled contracts —some 2,200 —could result in more strikes later if settlement is not reached."

In Seattle, teachers voted to strike on their first preparation day. Classes for 50,000 students are scheduled to resume tomorrow. The teachers had asked for a 20.6 percent raise over two years. The school board offered 16 percent. The annual starting salary for beginning teachers under the old contract was $9,007.

In Boston, teachers voted unanimously to reject the latest offer for a two-year contract, with no raise the first year and a six percent increase in the second. They had demanded a one-year pact, with two raises of five percent, in September and February. The teachers' negotiating team will meet in the first week of October to consider a walkout if school officials have not accepted the union's proposal or agreed to binding arbitration.

In Buffalo, teachers set up picket lines yesterday after voting for a strike Monday. Classes were scheduled to open today for some 54,000 students. A teachers spokesman said about 30 issues divided the two sides, including a school board move to freeze wages.

Edie Schaffner helping another first grader, Harvey Daniel, with a project at Emerson Elementary School in Dayton, Ohio. Confusion over some school bus stops was the only problem reported by officials on the third day of Ohio's first school-busing program. About 14,000 students were bused.

Little Rock High School Now Desegregation Model

reluctantly across the room to fill it out.

Central became the best known high school in the world in 1957, two years before Sybil Jordan enrolled, when nine bold, frightened children broke the color bar there. They had to be protected by Federal troops for a year. With occasional abatement, it remained a hard and often cruel place throughout the 1960's and into this decade.

Central is now one of the most effectively desegregated public schools in the United States.

It is not merely the numbers, which are about 50-50 black and white, with perhaps a slight majority of blacks.

During the last two or three years, the black and white students have approached something close to harmony. Racial violence has practically disappeared. Athletic teams, cheerleader squads and several other student organizations are integrated after years of foot-dragging by some of them. Both races participate vigorously in student government, and the elective offices are about evenly divided between blacks and whites.

Tension seemed to be nonexistent as the 1976-77 school year began Monday. A few black and white students walked and talked together between classes, although a large majority still gathered with members of their own race.

Change Not Explained

No one is able to explain fully how this relaxation came about. Several theories can be heard, but precisely what happened is a little of a mystery.

Whatever the reasons, much of the community is pleased and proud. Little Rock and Central High were once synonymous with racism in many parts of the world. It was never that simple; many here were not racists. But the town is happy to be rid of even the appearance of fear and hate in its most famous institution.

"My general impression is that Little Rock has made a better adjustment than many Northern cities," Ernest G. Green, one of the first nine black students at Central, who now lives in New York, said in a telephone interview today. He is executive director of Recruitment and Training Programs, Inc., which works for better jobs for blacks.

Black students in Central now, 19 years after Mr. Green enrolled there, share that feeling. Some laugh when they hear of racial turmoil in Boston and other cities. One girl said, "They condemned the South for being so backward, but they're still segregated and we're not."

Racial tension has not disappeared in Little Rock. New, predominantly white high schools in the western end of the city, where many whites fled in what was finally a vain attempt to avoid desegregation, are still plagued by periodic outbursts of racial violence. So are several junior high schools.

Sybil Stevenson, now director of higher education opportunities at Iona College, in New Rochelle, goes home to Little Rock regularly. She believes one reason for Central's success is the white flight to the western part of the city. White troublemakers tended to move away from Central, she said, and while that helped Central, it probably pushed back effective desegregation in those western schools by several years.

Many Whites Bused

That appears to be true. However, many of Central's white students are bused in —over the objection of some parents — from those same western suburbs.

School Superintendent Paul R. Fair, who is white, said this week that the district had done many things to try to make desegregation work. Counseling rooms, for example, have been opened in every school where angry students are sent to "cool off" and talk about their problems.

Mr. Fair said that a great effort had been made to improve basic educational skills. He said that much progress had been made in closing the academic gap between white and black students. Blacks now score considerably higher on tests and whites score slightly better than 10 years ago, he said. Desegregation has made those gains come easier, he said.

But why has Central High, after years of tumult, gone so far toward racial harmony.

One reason mentioned by almost every student and teacher interviewed is a new principal, Morris Holmes, 36, the second black principal since the school was desegregated, took over two years ago. He apparently enjoys exceptional rapport with black and white students and is spoken of with respect in and out of the school.

Another reason given for Central's progress is that today's black and white students have been going to school together since the early grades. Little Rock abandoned tokenism in 1971 and began massive desegregation with busing and relatively minor disturbance.

John Jewell, white, the president of Central's student body, and Jimmy Smith, black, the star linebacker of their championship football team, first got to know each other that year. They were seventh graders at Southwest Junior High School, bused there—against their will, initially —from different parts of town.

Now they are friends. They have worked together at scores of student coimcil meetings and football practices.

One other possible reason for Central's easy-going atmosphere might be that the black students finally feel at home there. They are no longer a tiny minority. They are involved in almost every activity.

Every student interviewed, black and white, talked of a new school spirit.

Pamela Harris, a black senior who was defeated by John Jewell for student president last spring, knows about the 1957 troubles and the bad years that followed.

"But I still feel great pride in Central," she said. "This is my school and if anyone says anything against it, it hurts my feelings."

The football team, nicknamed The Tigers, was undefeated last year. Black and white students used to segregate themselves in the bleachers, but that has begun to break down as they come in growing numbers to cheer the red hot Tigers.

"When the Central High Tigers are on the field," Pamela Harris said, "everybody sitting on our side of the stadium is a Tiger, regardless of what color they are."

Berkeley Turns Into Mecca for Handicapped Persons

By NANCY HICKS
Special to The New York Times

BERKELEY, Calif., Sept. 5—The Free Speech and People's Park struggles are long gone, but Berkeley has become a mecca for a new, equally radical movement — the growing numbers of handicapped people who are determined to live independent lives in the community, out of their family basements, out of the institutions that have kept them hidden for so long.

Armed with new antidiscrimination legislation that protects the 25 million physically and emotionally handicapped Americans, and working with a sympathetic City Council here, the handicapped are pushing to open up this town to accommodate their wheelchairs and accept their disfigurements, and they are succeeding.

Unusual Student Body

"Berkeley ought to be the kind of place where people feel free to create something and be whatever they want to be," said City Manager Elijah Rogers, in explaining why this municipality is spending $250,000 this year to put an elevator in City Hall so that citizens in wheelchairs can attend City Council meetings and to continue the program of constructing sidewalk ramps for wheelchairs.

They have a friend in Sacramento, the state capital—Edward V. Roberts, a quadriplegic who runs the state's programs for the handicapped as director of rehabilitation. Mr. Roberts, a controversial figure, is credited with beginning the Berkeley movement for the handicapped when he convinced the university here to admit him as a student against its will in 1962.

The disabled have now swelled their ranks in the student population at the university to what is probably the largest concentration of handicapped people on a campus in the country—409 students, 150 of them in wheelchairs.

And they have set up an unusual service and support center, the Center for Independent Living, which is complete with peer counseling, job and housing referral and a kind of travel service for wheelchairs. It has become a model replicated around the state, the country and the world.

The center, C.I.L., as it is known, is the hub of activity for the handicapped here. An out growth of the campus radicalism of the 1960's, it has been a driving force to challenge traditional charity groups, to help define issues, and to provide nuts and bolts answers to problems that keep the disabled out of circulation, it does the following:

¶Operates a 24-hour-a-day wheelchair repair program, complete with emergency road service, to enhance mobility, which center leaders believe is the key to integrating the handicapped into mainstream life. Recognizing that most wheelchairs are designed for indoor use and break down often as a result, it has made prototype of a new, smaller, more sturdy chair built with longer-lasting parts that are cheap and easily available in bicycle shops and department stores.

¶Modifies cars and vans to allow the handicapped to drive. It modifies wheelchair controls so that those who are unable to use their hands or fingers can use their chins, cheeks or foreheads —whatever moves—to propel themselves to their destination. The center is training other handicapped people to make these repairs so that they become the nucleus for staffing other centers like theirs across the country.

¶Operates an attendant referral services that screens and develops a pool of reliable aides who help immobile people bathe, dress and eat.

¶Seeks to remove sections of Federal welfare laws that discourage persons from working. While Federal rehabilitation law is supposed to encourage work opportunities for the disabled, Federal programs that provide allowances for living, for help and for attendants are often cut off once the disabled person earns more than $3,000 a year. Government agencies estimate that a paripiegic has to earn $12,000 a year to recover lost benefits through income.

¶Sponsors bachelor's and master's degree programs in health administration and psychology with the Center for Health Studies at Antioch College.

The essence of C.I.L.'s approach is its federally funded peer-counseling research project, headed by Don Galloway.

Mr. Galloway, who was blinded in childhood play at age 13, is also the local president of an organization called BOLD —the Blind Outdoor Leisure Development project—which sponsors skiing, white water rafting, tandem bicycle groups and backpacking parties for the blind.

...ioactive Waste at the Nation's Nine Storage Centers Is Termed a Major Hazard to Health

by DAVID BURNHAM
Special to The New York Times

...IGTON, Sept. 7—A prominent ...rgy expert has concluded that ...ions gallons of high-level radio... ...te and the 51 million cubic ...-level waste now stored at ...ered locations in the United ...tes a major health hazard.

...page draft report prepared for ... Research and Development ...ion, the expert said that the ...vernment's past handling of ... material had been "marred ...ient number of instances to ...or concern."

...rt, Jason Willrich, who is ... of absence from the law ...niversity of Virginia, is the director for international studies at the Roskefeller Foundation. At the time he was writing the report, Mr. Willrich was a visiting professor of nuclear engineering at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

"A major radioactive waste problem already exists in the United States," the Willrich report said, noting that the escape of material into the air and water of the earth would "constitute a radiological hazard for hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions of years."

The concerned tone of the report on radioactive waste management and regulation appeared to contrast with a study released in June by the Federal Energy Resources Council that emphasized that scientific and technological solutions to handling waste were feasible.

The Willrich report charged that the existing system of storing waste soon "will be unworkable" and that Federal enforcement of safety standards "will be ineffective" without a drastic reorganization of these functions.

The report, a copy of which was obtained and made public today by Ralph Nader, a critic of nuclear power, will gain some credibility among supporters of nuclear power by a notation in the introduction that its conclusions and recommendations had won the support of Dr. Norman C. Rasmussen, chairman of the nuclear engineering department of M.I.T.

Dr. Rasmussen was the director of a major study recently completed for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission that attempted to measure the chances of a serious accident in a nuclear reactor. It has been used by industry to answer some of the questions raised by those opposed to nuclear reactors.

Radioactive waste is generated by nuclear fission in the 61 reactors now generating electricity for commercial use, the Government reactors producing plutonium for the manufacture of atomic weapons and the propulsion for submarines, missile cruisers, and aircraft carrers.

The report said that the Government's military reactors were presently producing 7.5 million gallons of liquid high-level waste each year and that it was expected that the growing number of commercial reactors would produce a total of 60 million gallons of such waste in the next 25 years.

Concerning low-level wastes, which also can present radiological hazards, the report said that the Government was now producing 1.3 million cubic feet a year and that the commercial plants anticipated producing a total of 50 million cubic feet of such low level materials—wiping rags, discarded mochinery, effluents—by the year 2,000.

At the Government's major storage area in Hanford, Wash., 18 leaks have resulted in losses of 430,000 gallons of high-level wastes into the surrounding soil, acccording to the report. Another recent study, this one conducted by the Environmental Protection Agency, found that, contrary to the initial expectations, plutonium was being washed out of low-level waste buried in a commercial dump in Kentucky and into the surrounding soil.

"These leaks have neither killed nor injured anyone to date," the report said. "Nonetheless, their hazard will remain for hundreds of thousands of years."

Industry Role Weighed

The question of what the Government has done about radioactive waste and what it will require the industry to do in the future remains one of the major emotional and technological challenges of the proponents of nuclear power.

The nine locations where military and commercial wastes are stored, in some instances with leaks and other technical problems, are Richmond, Wash.; Savannah River, S.C.; Idaho Falls, Idaho; Los Alamos, N.M.; Oak Ridge, Tenn.; Beatty, Nev.; Moorehead, Ky.; Sheffield, Ill., and West Valley, N.Y.

Studies of Teeth Link Japanese To Influx of Chinese in 200 B.C.

By BOYCE RENSBERGER

Studies of ancient and modern teeth from Japan and China have led an American anthropologist to conclude that the Japanese people of today are descendents of a colony of Chinese people who sailed to Japan about 2,200 years ago and displaced a culturally more primitive people who had been living there for thousands of years.

This biological evidence confirms controversial theories put forth by historians about 20 years ago.

There has long been debate over what caused the sudden and widespread appearance of Chinese cultural remains in Japanese archeological deposits of about 200 B.C. While some experts had suggested a large influx of Chinese people, others argued that the Japanese people had always been on the islands and that heavy trading with China brought in the artifacts.

The evidence of the teeth also suggests that the present Ainu people of Japan, a culturally primitive tribe whose origins have long been in doubt, are a remnant of the earlier inhabitants of Japan.

Mongoloid Descent Seen

Although it is often suggested that the Ainu, a light-skinned people who do not look particularly Oriental, are Caucasoids, the dental evidence from them and the earlier people living in Japan suggests descent from a Mongoloid or proto-Mongoloid stock.

The studies were made by Dr. Christy G. Turner 2d, a physical anthropologist at Arizona State University in Tempe. His report was published in the Sept. 3 issue of the journal Science.

Although anthropologists prefer to have complete skeletons on which to base racial identifications or to trace ancestries of groups, they are seldom available in sufficient numbers. Teeth, being harder, preserve better and exist in large numbers for many ancient populations.

The shapes of teeth, particularly of the cusps and grooves on the biting surfaces, are known to be genetically controlled and to persist in consistent patterns in populations over many generations. Geographically separated races and subracial populations often have characteristic dental features that can be used to distinguish one group from another.

To make his study, Dr. Turner examined teeth from 277 Chinese people who lived during the Shang Dynasty in China around 1100 B.C., 101 Jomon people living in Japan at about the same time, and 85 present-day Ainus. He compared certain traits with those known from published reports to be characteristic of modern Japanese.

'Overwhelming Evidence'

"The data are overwhelming," Dr. Turner said in a telephone interview. They show that the Japanese most closely resemble the ancient Chinese and that the Ainu most closely resemble the ancient inhabitants of Japan.

Archeologists call the prehistoric Japanese, whose bones and cultural remains have been found over the four main islands of Japan, the Jomon people. They are known to have been hunters and gatherers, relying heavily on shellfish. The Jomon people lived in settled villages and may have practiced a primitive form of agriculture.

Traditional Japanese scholars have asserted that the present-day Japanese people are descendents of the Jomon people.

"Now it looks as if the Japanese are descendents of the Chinese, whose arrival had the same impact on the Jomon people as the Europeans hitting the New World," Dr. Turner said.

In parts of Japan where the Ainu people still live, most of them as peasant farmers, they suffer from racial discrimination similar to that directed by white Americans at American Indians, Dr. Turner added.

Ford 'Campaigns' From White House by Signing Bills

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7 — President Ford, establishing a pattern for a back porch campaign, used the White House today as a setting to demand an accounting of Americans still missing in Vietnam, for the most part, in the White House. to display compassion for flood victims and to further his thesis that vetoes are a vital tool of government.

The President appeared late today before reporters and television technicians to reiterate what his spokesmen had said earlier, that diplomatic relations with Vietnam could not be normalized until Hanoi gave "a full accounting without further delay" of all Americans listed as missing in action in the war.

Earlier, for the benefit of the television cameras, Mr. Ford twice ventured into the White House rose garden to sign into law two measures, read statements on each and, in a moment of exuberance, shake hands twice with his wife, Betty.

While none of the events was unusual, each was described as an element in a Presidential campaign strategy through which Mr. Ford will make his case for staying in the White House by staying, for the most part,in the White House.

The bills signed by Mr. Ford provided full compensation for victims of the June 5 collapse of a Bureau of Reclamation dam on the Teton River in Idaho and delayed until late 1977 the enforcement of controversial Federal standards for the staffing of day care centers.

The compromise day care measure was hailed by the President as a "new and better version" of legislation he vetoed last April and as evidence that his 55 vetoes in two years had "exerted a balancing influence on the Congress."

The compromise bill put off until Oct. 1, 1977, the imposition of requirements, first enacted in 1974, for staffing federally assisted centers that provide care for children of the poor. It also directed the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to study the appropriateness of the delayed regulations and it provided $24 million in interim funds to help the centers meet existing health and safety standards.

The Teton Dam relief act committed the Government to provide full compensation to the victims of the flood caused by the collapse of the dam. Eleven individuals were killed and more than $400 million in property damage was caused by the failure of the dam in southeastern Idaho.

Apart from the significance of the two measures themselves, the White House ceremonies today illustrated Mr. Ford's strategy of countering the energetic cross-country campaigning by Jimmy Carter, the Democratic nominee for President, by spending most of his time on highly visible "Presidential" activities.

This morning Mr. Ford's aides arranged a small desk, straightbacked chair and fiberglass floor mat on the lush White House lawn so that television cameras could film the President striding to them from the Oval Office to sign the Teton dam measure.

An hour later, the desk, chair and mat had been moved and the television cameras repositioned so that Mr. and Mrs. Ford could be filmed striding into the garden from a different White House door.

In each instance, leading Congressional sponsors of the legislation, Democrats and Republicans, were arrayed behind the desk where Mr. Ford used several pens to sign each of the measures.

Notably absent from the second ceremony, however, was the principal Senate advocate of Federal assistance to day care centers for the poor, Senator Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota, the proponent, was instead in California, campaigning as the Democratic nominee for Vice President.

Unlike Mr. Carter, Mr. Mondale and Mr. Ford's own running mate, Senatoor Robert J. Dole, the President will refrain from political travel until next week, when he is scheduled to deliver an address on education at his alma mater, the University of Michigan.

Mr. Ford has instead granted an interview to Harry Reasoner, the ABC News anchorman, for broadcast in segments every evening this week, and he sought the maximum exposure from the White House ceremonies today.

Mr. Ford's statement on the missing Americans in Vietnam essentially repeated what Administration spokesmen had said since Hanoi gave the United States Embassy in Paris a list yesterday of 12 airmen killed in the Vietnam war.

The gesture by Hanoi, presumed here to be a prelude to a bid for United Nations membership that Washington could veto, was welcomed but described as insufficient by State Department and White House officials before the President read a similar reaction.

"It is callous and cruel to exploit human suffering in the hope of diplomatic advantage," Mr. Ford said, adding that he had renewed a demand for a full listing of the fates of "hundreds more" of the Americans listed as missing or known to be dead without their bodies having been recovered.

Although the practice often is dispensed with at informal events, each appearance by Mr. Ford in the rose garden today was heralded by a stentorian voice that declared, "Ladies and gentlemen, the President of the United States."

Having signed the day care bill Mr. Ford prepared to mingle with the legislators and the representatives of interested private groups.

"Congratulations,"said Mrs. Ford. Instinctively, the President put out his right hand and shook his wife's hand.

Moments later, as the President and Mrs. Ford greeted each guest separately, Mr. Ford worked his way through the group and shook hands with every last one—including his wife again.

Udall Challanged for House Se[...] Arizona G.O.P. Senate Race B[...]

By The Associated Press

An erstwhile Presidential candidate and a member of Congress in trouble with his colleagues tried to hold on to House seats yesterday as several states held primaries.

Representative Morris K. Udall, who came in second to Jimmy Carter in the Democratic Presidential primaries, was challenged for his Arizona House seat by Ruben Romero, a Tucson city councilman.

The Arizona race on the Republican side featured a challenge to the House minority leader, John A. Rhodes, and a bitter race between two conservative members of Congress, Sam Steiger and John Conlan, for the Senate nomination to succeed the retiring Paul Fannin.

Carolyn Warner, the state education superintendent; former state Attorney General Wade Church, and Dennis DeConcini, a lawyer, are seeking the Democratic nomination for Senator Fannin's seat.

In Florida, Representative Robert L.F. Sikes, a 35-year Congressional veteran, faced a challenge from John Benton Jr., 26 years old, only a year above the minimum House age. Mr. Sikes was reprimanded by the House in July for not disclosing a possible conflict of interest involving some of his financial dealings and his chairmanship of the Military Construction Appropriations subcommittee.

There was also a three-way race for the Republican Senate nomination, with the winner to run against Senator Lawton Chiles, a Democrat. Two conservatives, Dr. John Grady and Walter Sims, faced Helen Hansel, a St. Petersburg lawyer who was seeking moderate votes.

In North Dakota, Richard Elkin, president of the Public Service Commission, and Herb Geving were contending for the Republican gubernatorial nomination, with the winner to face Gov. Arthur A. Link, a Democrat, who was [...] for renomination.

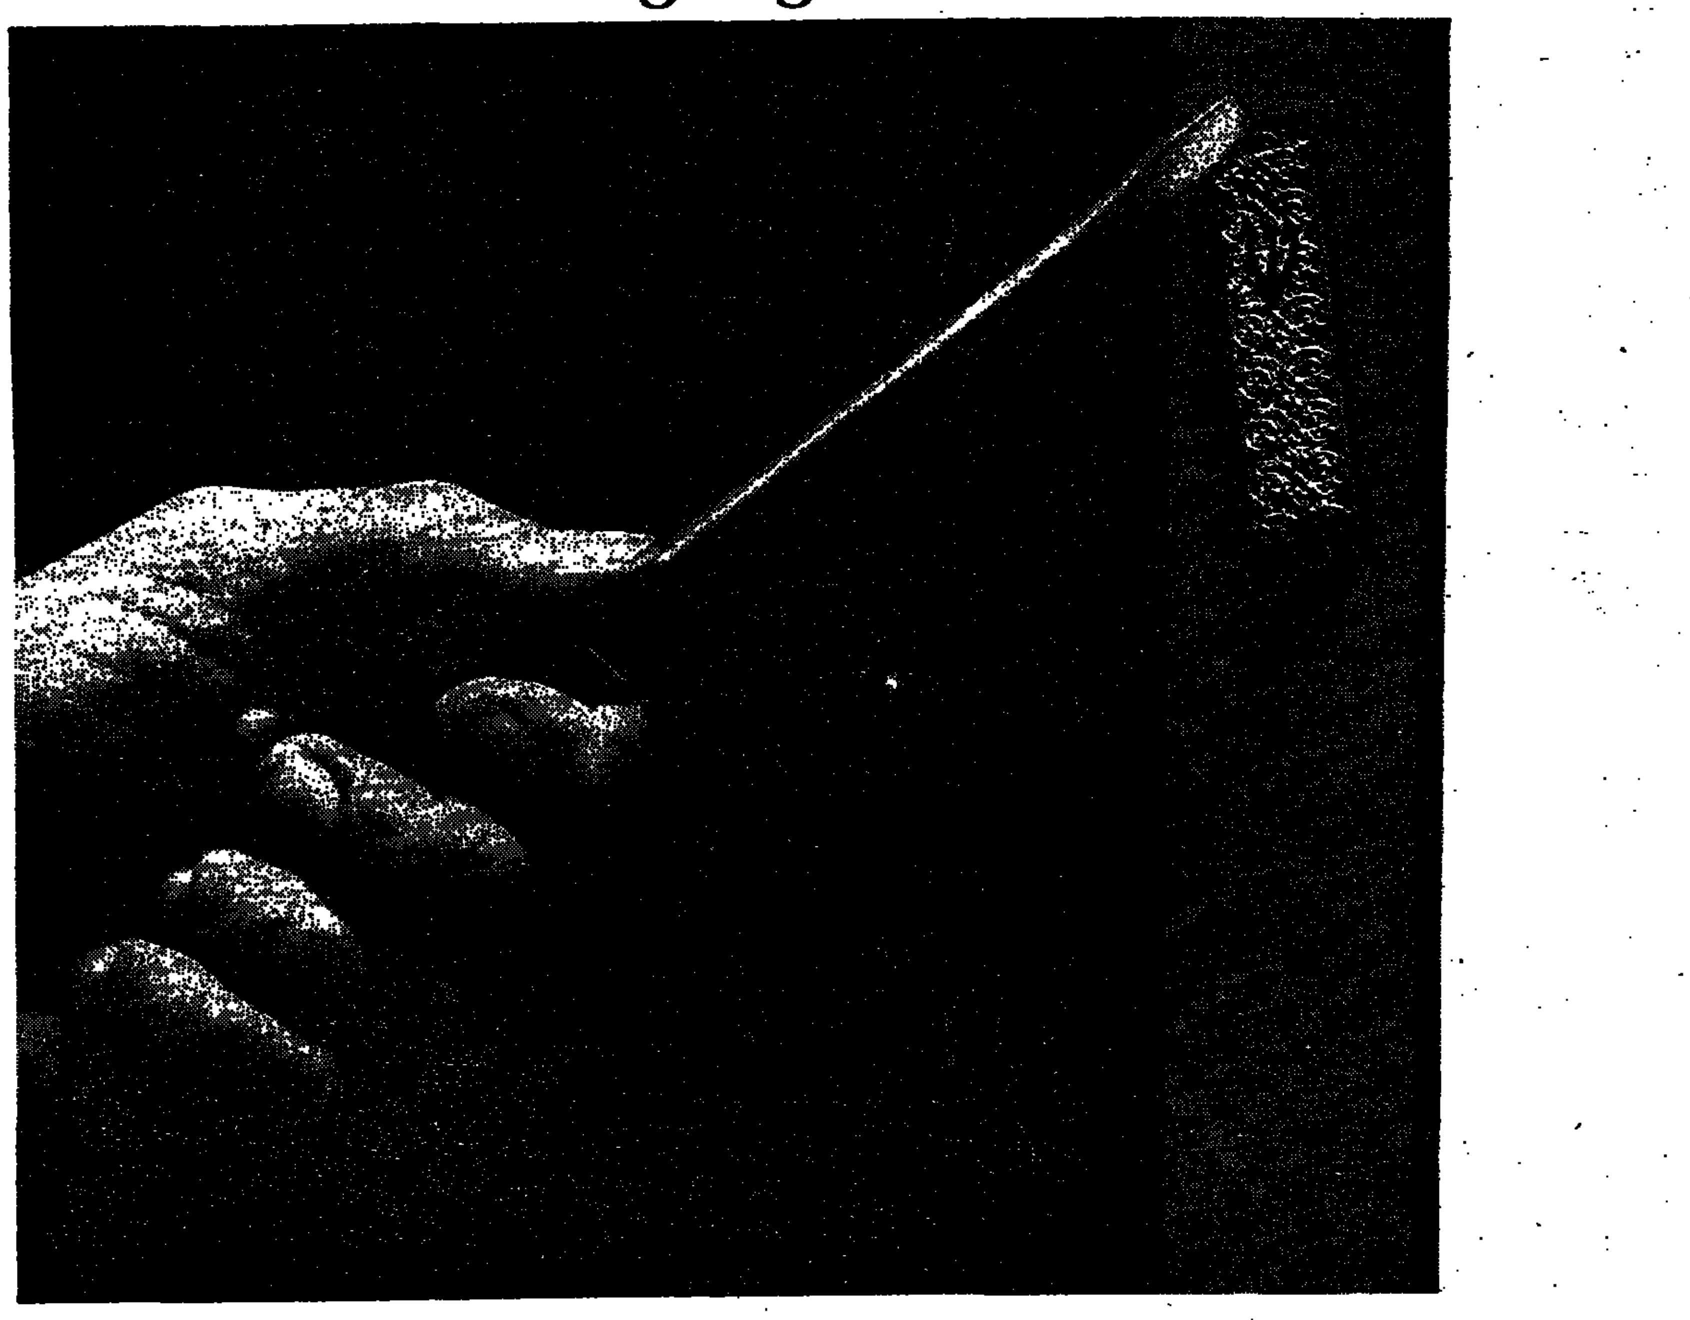
Is it going on...



or is it just going?

As your children grow older, they'll settle down with families of their own. Many will place a mezuzah on their door as a symbol of their Judaism...but many more won't.

You see, American Jewry is on the decline. The rate of intermarriage is 31.7%. The rates of conversion, assimilation and alienation from Judaism are reaching frightening proportions. And it means, in a matter of time, there won't be an American Jewry to speak of.

Today, a substantial number of Jewish children are being raised without any knowledge of the history, culture and traditions of the Jewish people. And their children, your grandchildren, will probably be brought up without any Jewish identity...in essence, lost to the Jewish way of life.

Survival through education

One way to combat the attrition of American Jewry, is to give your children a Jewish education. The values and knowledge received from such an education, are indispensable to Jewish self-preservation.

A Jewish education is a modern, well-rounded experience providing a comprehensive program in Judaic and Hebrew studies, fashioned to instill a strong sense of Judaism and promote the Jewish way of life in our children. A tradition which has contributed so much to the advancement of mankind.

Fill in coupon below, or call the "Jewish Education Hotline" (212) 245-8390 for further information. If you want, we'll put you in contact with a Jewish educational institution that meets your particular needs and requirements.

Do it soon. Before the Jewish family is a thing of the past.

Nominee Vows to Urge Industries Not to Move Out of New York

By CHARLES MOHR

Jimmy Carter said yesterday that, if he is elected President, he would try to persuade business and industrial leaders not to move their headquarters from New York, thus arresting a deteriorating economic situation that he said "is feeding on itself."

The Democratic Presidential nominee began the second full day of his fall election campaign in New York, where he arrived Monday night. He noted that he had already visited the city three times in recent weeks and said he hoped to return "often" during the campaign.

When he did come to this state, which has the second-largest Elecoral College vote in the nation, Mr. Carter said he wanted to visit neighborhoods and answer voters' questions, as he did yesterday in an appearance at Brooklyn College.

The former Georgia Governor began the day with what was planned as a hand-shaking tour at the subway station at Columbus Circle. But it was a so-called "media event" in which the news media, in effect, got out of control and became the message.

Unable to Chat With Riders

Mr. Carter was so closely hemmed in by television cameras, microphones, writers and Secret Service agents that he was unable to chat with passengers and could meet only a handful of New Yorkers entering or leaving the subway station.

At one point the candidate plaintively asked an aide, "Is there some way I can see the people down here?"

There did not seem to be. In fact, at times the Transit Authority Police had to assist distracted passengers who were blocked from their train to the street by the milling mob of journalists.

Mr. Carter motored from the station to Walt Whitman Hall at Brooklyn College at Flatbush and Nostrand Avenues, which was filled with an overflow crowd of several hundred students and adults.

After brief remarks, in which he accused President Ford of having told New York City to "drop dead," Mr. Carter answered questions from the audience.

Of special interest to New York was his repetition of previous pledges that, if elected, he would meet soon after the election with Mayor Beame and Governor Carey to work out a long-range plan for New York's financial problems. Mr. Carter said there would be "complete support from the White House" for the solution of these problems.

Anxious to Campaign Here

After the speech, he met with a group of New York Democrats in an office near the hall and said he was anxious to campaign with the candidates chosen in the forthcoming state primary.

"I want to see a Democratic majority in the House and Senate in Albany," Mr. Carter said.

Among those who met with Mr. Carter were Representatives Shirley Chisholm and Elizabeth Holtzman, both of Brooklyn; State Senator Albert Blumenthal, the minority leader of the State Senate, who is not seeking re-election; State Senator Stanley Steingut; City Councilman Sam Wright, who is Mrs. Chisholm's opponent in the Democratic primary; Harrison J. Goldin, the City Comptroller, and Mayor Beame.

End of Rubber Strike Forecast

AKRON, Ohio, Sept. 7 (AP) — United Rubber Workers officials predicted today that the last of the master agreements ending a 20-week strike against the major rubber companies would be approved in tomorrow's voting. "I think it will go through," Ray Wiseman, president of Local 715 at the Goodrich plant in Woodburn, Ind., said of the tentative agreement with the B. F. Goodrich Company.

it,' and Mr. Ford said, 'Well, I'll let him stay where he is.'"

According to a report by the Department of Justice, Mr. Kelley accepted household gifts from his subordinates, and F.B.I. carpenters constructed valances for the windows of his Washington apartment.

Warming to his subject, Mr. Carter said, "When big and little people see Richard Nixon lying, cheating and leaving the highest office in disgrace and the previous Attorney General violating the law and admitting it, when you see the head of the F.B.I. break a little law and stay there, it gives everybody the sense that crime must be O.K. If the big shots in Washington can get away with it, well, so can I."

His acerbic observations prompted an enthusiastic response from 400 Philadelphians jammed into St. Simeon's Lutheran Church and took some of the edge off an embroglio over whether he would be able to meet with a community action group in a nearby Roman Catholic church.

Mr. Carter had originally been scheduled to meet with representatives of Community Organizations Acting Together in a hall at Our Lady of Pompeii Church, which the group had reserved.

Yesterday, however, the parish priest was notified by the local diocese that if Mr. Carter and the group were to use the church hall for the meeting, the issue of abortion would have to be on the agenda.

The community group said that it was most interested in such things as "redlining" by banks—excluding certain neighborhoods from eligibility from home loans—and rescheduled the meeting in the Lutheran Church.

Mr. Carter may have been relieved by the move, since his anti-abortion stand has been criticized by many Roman Catholic officials. Nevertheless, at the mid-point of an hour-long stroll through the littered streets of the neighborhood around St. Simeon's Church, he mounted a stoop, grabbed a portable microphone and reiterated his views on abortion and his resistance to a constitutional amendment that would ban it.

Doffing his coat at the beginning of a question-and-answer session in Walt Whitman Hall at Brooklyn College, Mr. Carter said that he thought United States involvement in the Vietnam war was a "terrible mistake."

But he said that he thought at the time that, given that involvement, "We ought to try to win the war."

Later, in 1971, in an interview with Time magazine, he said that he recommended a unilateral withdrawal and an arbitrary declaration of victory.

In response to a question on education, he said, "I would give all the aid I could to parochial schools, within the framework of the Supreme Court decision."

The candidate's day began early, as most of them do, with a walk through a subway station in New York City. After the speech at the college, he met with local Democratic leaders there, including Representative Shirley Chisholm and Representative Elizabeth Holtzman, and then flew to Groton, where he lived in 1948 and again in 1950 as a young Naval officer.

A crowd of several thousand people listened patiently but quietly as Mr. Carter promised a strong national defense based on "a proper priority in the expenditure of public funds."

Many of his listeners in Conne were workers in the General Dyn Electric Boat Division, which has D ment of Defense contracts for the struction of 22 nuclear submarines Trident class. Most of the workers on their lunch hour, and they fi three-block-long area in front of him Introducing The Empire Stakes Instant Lottery.

Where no one has a better chance than you.

The Empire Stakes Instant Lottery is like no other lottery New York State has ever had.

It's instant.

Which means that instead of having to wait days or weeks to find out if you're a winner, you'll know instantly.

And being a winner in The Empire Stakes Instant Lottery could mean up to $1,000 a week for life.

Match three dollar amounts, and you've won

Using a coin, scrape the coating off the 6 squares on your ticket. Under each is a dollar amount. Uncover three of the same dollar amounts, and that's how much you've won. It's that simple. Instant prizes range from $2 to $5,000. Prizes of $2 and $5 can be collected right where you bought your ticket.

And winning isn't a long shot. The odds are better than 1 in 10 that you'll win a cash prize in The Instant Lottery. For every 480,000 tickets, there are 38,880 two-dollar winners, 10,080 five-dollar winners, twenty $100 winners, ten $500 winners, six $1,000 winners, two $5,000 winners, and two Jackpot winners.

How you can win $1,000 a week for life

Finding "Jackpot" under all six squares makes you eligible for a special Jackpot Drawing where you'll win at least $5,000 and where you could win as much as $1,000 a week for life. ($1,000,000 guaranteed.)

What you can win besides cash

Even if you don't win a cash prize, you still have a chance to be a winner. On every ticket there's a round bonus spot. Scrape it to uncover a letter. Collect the letters that spell "New York," and you've won $2,500 in groceries.

Where to buy tickets

Instant tickets are on sale at supermarkets, chain stores, newsstands, drug stores, thousands of outlets all over the state. Wherever you see an Empire Stakes sign.

The Empire Stakes Instant Lottery. It's the one game where no one has a better chance than you.

CITIVIEWS

CITIVIEWS is distributed quarterly to Citicorp investors. It contains viewpoints on timely issues affecting the public interest. We believe the following may be of interest to you...

"Suppose they held a convention and nobody came?"

A television commentator raised this question during the unprecedented series of political primaries that launched the 1976 presidential campaign. It deserves to be answered. What, indeed, would happen if nobody came to the conventions? Or, for that matter, if no one bothered to vote in the election. Would anybody care? Does it matter?

It has become the custom in election years to urge everyone to vote. National advertising campaigns popularize slogans like "Vote for the Candidate of Your Choice—But Vote." It is considered somewhat of an embarrassment that, among all the Western democracies, the United States turns out the lowest percentage of voters on election day. And whatever he might secretly prefer, no candidate for office is heard to say, "Unless you intend to vote for me, please stay home." Even a vote for the opposition is presumed to be better than no vote at all.

Illogical as this presumption might appear, it springs from a sound historical instinct. For the history of democracy has been the continual rediscovery that all members of a society—rich and poor, wise and foolish—somehow contrive a better life for themselves when their political decisions are made collectively than when left to any one group in the society acting alone.

That is the one essential tenet of the democratic faith, without which democratic government becomes impossible. A citizen who fails to vote is, in effect, denying fellow citizens the benefit of his or her opinion. Were every citizen to behave likewise, the democratic process would grind to a halt. Intentionally or not, the voter who chooses to "sit this one out" is indulging in conduct that is fundamentally anti-democratic and perceived as such by those struggling to make the democratic system work. It is one more tiny leak in the ship of state.

Subversion of democracy consists of nothing more than placing the ultimate power to decide in the hands of some one citizen, or some group of citizens, to the exclusion of all the others. Whether the decision-making power comes to rest in the hands of a few because they conspire to seize it, or because others let it slip from their grasp, the result is the same. This is a point apparently overlooked by large numbers of Americans. For despite our relatively poor performance at the polling place, in opinion polls we continue to regard our own democracy as healthier than most others. People are able to believe this because, as one pollster recently reported, "If they did not actively participate in political affairs, they felt they could do so if they wanted to." This was also the view of the Roman Senate in the time of Augustus. Only when they attempted to renew their active participation, after the lapse of a generation or so, did they discover that while they were relaxing, Rome had ceased to be a republic.

Poor health in a democratic society infected by too many nonparticipating members becomes apparent, however, long before the disease becomes terminal. More than one hundred years ago, John Stuart Mill was able to write:

When nobody, or only some small fraction, feels the degree of interest in the general affairs of the State necessary to the formation of a public opinion, the electors will seldom make any use of the right of suffrage but to serve their private interest, or the interest of their locality, or of someone with whom they are connected as adherents or dependents. The small class who, in this state of public feeling, gain the command of the representative body, for the most part use it solely as a means of seeking their fortune.

It is hardly necessary to point out that the phenomena Mill described were not unique to early 19th-century England, nor to adduce further arguments for getting to the polls on election day.

Dissatisfaction with the candidates and issues put forward by our two major parties is the most commonly heard excuse for nonvoting. "If they want me to vote, let them put up somebody worth voting for"—like a dyspeptic guest at a smorgasbord waiting for the caterers to spread their wares on the table.

The citizen who feels this way is confusing the role of a voter with that of a consumer. In a free-market society, the consumer's disinclination to buy is a powerful creative force, eliminating wasteful surpluses and inspiring ceaseless innovation and invention as producers seek to overcome consumer apathy with more desirable goods and better services. But an election is not an auction, and the political arena is not a banquet hall. If we succeeded in turning it into one, and left the catering to others, the result would not be a more elaborate and tempting buffet to choose from, but service table d'hôte—one dish for everyone, with no substitutions allowed. This has, in fact, been known to happen. It is called the one-party state.

Those who call themselves "Independents" now slightly outnumber those who consider themselves Democrats, and are more than twice as numerous as those who consider themselves Republicans. But to express dissatisfaction with the performance of the political parties by becoming "independent" is not to create a new alternative, for it really means withdrawing from that part of the electoral process where people decide what this year's political options are going to be. Since there is no "Independent Party," it offers us no options of its own, and it is misleading to say, "She's a Democrat, he's a Republican, and I'm an Independent." For the first two represent coalitions of people engaged in a common political effort, whereas "Independent" refers only to an individual who is not so engaged.

Even Thomas Jefferson, who once wrote, "If I could not go to heaven but with a party, I would not go there at all," soon discovered that he could not impress his principles and beliefs upon the electorate of his day without the help of an organized political party. Does anyone really believe it can be done today? And even if there should arise among us one who could—through some singular mesmeric power over television, perhaps—would we really applaud the result?

The leader of a national political party in the United States, after all, represents far more than his party's platform. He stands atop a pyramid composed of party units in fifty states, each with its own problems to worry about, from local school boards to mayors and governors, senators, and congressmen (all functioning, presumably, without the help of our Independent voter). It is highly unlikely that any leader will ever arise who is wise enough to contain within himself such a sprawling diversity of aims and interests.

But even if such a paragon should be found, the rest of us would become hardly more than a "flock of sheep innocently nibbling the grass side by side," as Mill described the nonparticipating citizen, adding that "a people may prefer a free government, but if from indolence, or carelessness, or cowardice, or want of public spirit, they are unequal to the exertions necessary for preserving it...though it may be for their good to have had it even for a short time, they are unlikely long to enjoy it."

So perhaps the best way to respond to the question that occasioned this little essay—"Suppose they held a convention and nobody came?"—is to give no answer at all. The question is moot; in real life, it will never happen.

For you may depend on it, somebody will come. Someone always does. And there is still safety in numbers.

Aboard This Ship, Everybody Gets to Dine at Captain's Tab

By CRAIG CLAIBORNE

Special to The New York Times

BLOCK ISLAND, R.I.—It isn't the largest galley afloat and it certainly isn't the smallest. It measures about 9 by 12 feet, about the size of a decent apartment kitchen in Manhattan. Whatever its size, out of it comes some of the best meals in Atlantic and surrounding waters.

We've known for decades that when a good chef works, it is frequently for a 12-hour day with demonic devotion. We also know that when a good chef plays, it is generally with equal dedication and fervor.

Paul Steindler and his wife, Aja, were on a two-day spree that would carry them and a party of six from the Shagwong Marina on Three Mile Harbor in East Hampton, L.I., to the waters of Block Island where the boat would be anchored overnight. It was, Paul explained, only his second holiday after a long hot summer of gutting and rebuilding the interior of a restaurant scheduled to open in a month or two. That plus his frequent daily and nightly presence at the Duck Joint, a popular Manhattan eatery owned by him and his wife.

Well-Stocked Cabin

The anchor was hoisted, the boat moved away from the pier and Paul, at the wheel, was playing. The bits and pieces of his game that weekend would include a case or two of Dom Pérignon champagne, some in a cabin below, a constant supply being iced on deck; a pound of fresh Iranian caviar, the grains the size of buckshot; three kinds of pâtés; a quintet of fire-engine red lobsters recently cooked ashore and now being iced; an impressive pinkish-white hunk of veal for scaloppine; avocados; tomatoes fresh from the garden; a splendid jar of highly concentrated fish stock to be turned into chowder; a pair of sweetbreads braised in port wine (these would become the filling for a Sunday omelet). In the hold there were other wines with such labels as Puligny-Montrachet, Bâtard-Montrachet and Chateau Talbot.

Paul set the automatic pilot and settled down, offered his guests wine and his wife passed the assorted pâtés—a country pâté, a delicate sweetbread pâté and a fish pâté.

Paul sampled the country pâté and shook his head. "It's not as robust as it should be," he said. "It should have a touch of more cognac and a bit more garlic. It's a bit dry." The guests thought it was delicious.

Discusses His Past

Paul, who is 55 years old, discussed his past, noting that he was born in a small town close to Prague, that he fled his native Czechoslovakia at the time of the Communist takeover in 1948. He was at one time an Olympic wrestler, and his wife, Aja, a handsome woman with dark hair and a graceful, athletic walk, was twice the world ice skating champion. She was born in Prague and defected in 1950.

"Aja," Paul said, "was a star of the Ice Capades for 16 years. She spends most of her time in the restaurant, but she is still a talent scout for Ice Capades."

Aja is Paul's second wife and the name of his boat is Caraja, named for Aja and his daughter, Carol, by his previous marriage.

The most extended cruise the Steindlers have ever taken was for five days with eight people. Cooking on the boat had never been a problem because of his organization and a remarkably well-equipped kitchen, which also helps. There is a small electric stove with three top burners and an oven with a broiler above. When he uses the broiler, he generally gets down on his knees to tend whatever is being cooked. Next to the stove is a cutting and chopping area equipped with a small, rectangular cutting board.

Small Food Processor

He also has the smallest professional version of the French food processor that has recently become so popular in this country. His processor is one size larger than the Cuisinart machine and is called a Robot Coupe. (It is available in New York at Bridge Kitchenware, 212 East 52d Street, and is primarily designed for small restaurants.) He also has an electric skillet that he admires for its versatility and maneuverability. With it he has made sukiyaki for 20 guests on the fantail of his boat during a tour around Manhattan.

As the day progressed and after the boat had been safely anchored, more champagne was poured and eggs were cooked "mollet-style," which is to say less than hard-cooked so that they could be unmolded but with a soft center. He cracked the tops of the eggs, scooped out the insides, which he mashed. The egg shells were refilled with mashed egg and scallion; a touch of sour cream was piped into each and a large spoonful of the fresh caviar was placed on top. More champagne.

As the chef proceeded to the main course of the evening, veal scaloppine with cubed avocados and tomatoes, we learned a good number of things about boat cookery. Mr. Steindler, for instance, prepares ashore a fairly sizable assortment of foods with good keeping qualities and brings them aboard.

He prepares an assortment of "bases," such as concentrated fish broth to be turned into soup; an assortment of herb and vegetable butters, some made with shallots, some with garlic, onion, celery, carrots and so on which are kept in plastic containers. This, of course, eliminates a good deal of chopping while under way or at anchor.

The Steindlers prefer to entertain with six to eight at table, because, they explain, "anything beyond that is camping out" or that is the best number so as "not to be too much ashamed."

The couple also told us that they like to come to Block Island because each Sunday morning a boatman comes alongside singing "O Sole Mio" and selling freshly baked bread and meat pies. He also carts away any garbage that may have accumulated overnight.

Breakfast was followed by lunch, a superior fish chowder and an excellent lobster salad with avocados (avocados were in good supply aboard the vessel).

During the course of the weekend we learned that Mr. Steindler has recently purchased a landmark designated building, the old Humane Society edifice at 313 East 58th Street. He has gutted the building and excavated a basement. When it is transformed into a restaurant, tentatively named Paul's Landmark, it will have an inner dining room with a seating capacity of 85 plus a patio and a kitchen area of 2,500 square feet. That's no broom closet.

r the Members, Their Club's Routine alls Apart During Open at Forest Hills

n the belly of the clubhouse est Side Tennis Club, in an ind office paneled with wood t with linoleum the color of en beans, the busiest man in ugh of Queens is chain smok-answering the telephone. His est closely resembles those of e salesmen who rent business ear railroad stations.

led?" he asked. "Am I worried ything? I just hope and pray chef doesn't get sick."

days and nights that surround ay are the busiest time of the the West Side Tennis Club in lls. It is the time of the United pen tennis championships, the stigious American tennis tour-and surely by extension it est Side the most prestigious tennis club.

353 days a year during which sway at the club, the mem-bout their tennis playing and unhindered, and the club is t during the Open, the mem-up their exclusive rights to kers, locker rooms, dining ges, sun deck, toilet facilities the first week of the Open—r 49 tennis courts. Only the ourts are theirs alone.

the members object to the the fees," said Tony De-mber for the last 20 years. k it will cause a run on the t might lower the prestige."

Prestige, after all, is the calling card of membership.

So much so that nonresident members are known to take their vacations in order to come to West Side for the Open. Members and their guests swarm around the clubhouse.

Members who do not attend single club social functions all year, like Bill Mangold, attend the Open, when, ironically, all official social functions are suspended.

In fact, the Open is the biggest social function West Side has. So much bigger, for example, than the dance in the Rose Garden two weeks ago that 86 members attended. The Open is a reunion. The talk in the dining room runs to tennis, family and friendships, and more than once a business deal has been consummated over the prime rib of beef that goes for $8.50.

"You come here as a club member and you're not treated that way. You're treated as an intruder."

On a normal weekday in July the staff will serve 65 lunches. During the Open it will serve over 600 on a weekday. Don't even ask about weekends. The numbers soar.

Mr. Huizenga hires 40 extra employees for the clubhouse during the Open, swelling the overall staff to 60. The basic prices—$6.75 for the stuffed chicken, $1.50 for imported beer—are maintained because the membership is still being served. But the concession is that the menu stays constant for the Open, while it changes daily during the rest of the year.

"It's really amazing," Mr. Huizenga said. "With all these crowds, with all this congestion and, you'd think, inconvenience to the members, I haven't had one complaint about service. The members that I speak to really seem to love this tournament. It's like they bend over backwards to help it go smoothly."

Most. Not all.

Lore Noto, who has been a member for 12 years, does not buy a ticket to the Open; that is his protest. He doesn't like the Open played at his club, mainly because during the Open it is not really his club anymore.

"I joined this club to play tennis," Mr. Noto said. "During the tournament I have found myself locked out of the courts that I pay for. I have found myself being told that I cannot play on my tennis courts because I am supposed to show some respect for the pros. Show some respect? Hell, these pros are guests. Let them show me some respect.

"Now I'll say this: There will be a few who share this with me, maybe percent. People always say—and I resent it—that I'm a professional dissident. But I resent the fact that the stars control this situation. I resent being told over and over that I must accept their terms, that we need this tournament. It is anathema to me.

"During the tournament I can't even get three other members to play tennis with me, and this is a tennis club. They're all scared off, intimidated by these pros. Well, they ask us to give up our lockers for these pros, and I do not. For all I care they can take this tournament and play it in Louisville."

In every organization there is a certain amount of fanatic indignation. And Leo Tedesco, the club member who acts as a liaison between West Siders and the United States Tennis Association, which runs the Open, points out that, "No matter what we do, not everyone will agree with it."

Speaking for the overwhelming majority are West Siders such as Richard Windatt, a member for 10 years, and W. E. Sullivan, now in his 24th year of membership. Both play tennis about three times weekly.

"Listen, what difference does not being able to play on all the courts for a couple of weeks make?" asked Mr. Windatt, who said he played tennis on West Side grass courts during the Open and didn't feel the slightest bit intimidated.

"I have no inconvenience," he said. "As a matter of fact, it's refreshing to see all these people."

And Mr. Sullivan spoke of prestige.

"Prestige—yes, that's the word," Mr. Sullivan said. "Who else has the Open? I ask you, who else has this wonderful tournament?"

Obviously, no one.

But there are those members who like playing host to the tournament, but don't like having it shoved down their throats.

Bill Mangold has been a club member for more years than he cares to count, and he has seen club presidents and members of the Board of Governors come and go. And now, he says, "The board of Governors here treat the members like poor relations. I think the members are getting ripped off."

Operating on the financial principle that hamburger for one is better than chateaubriand for none, the 13-member board of governors—they can be seen on the grounds wearing official ribbons and Mr. Noto calls them "metal-breasted popinjays"—influenced the West Siders at large to relinquish all claim to their share of the $1 million three-year television contract that CBS has with the U.S.T.A. to telecast the Open.

"You come here as a club member, and you're not treated that way," said Tony DeGray. "Youre treated as an intruder. If these pros feel anything at all for the members, it's resentment for any of us who go on our courts and inhibit them from practicing."

And then there are the celebrities. "The members love the celebrities," Mr. Tucker said.

Most. Not all.

"I'd like to see Oleg Cassini and his crew get the hell out of here," said Tony DeGray. "And why is Alan King always hanging around the locker room?"

He has a clubhouse pass. But not being a member, his dues did not go up 25 percent this year.

A list that evaluates the best cooking schools in New York City appears on the following page.

Andrée's Mediterranean Cooking School, 301 East 66th Street, 249-6619.
Instructor: Andrée Abramoff.
Cost: $75 for five sessions.
Starting date: Sept. 15; mornings and evenings.
Type: Limited participation.
Description: Emphasis is on interesting Middle-Eastern dishes with some Provençal and Spanish clichés. Participation is limited in dining area; much cooking goes on off stage. Some dishes were good, others only fair.

Annemarie's Cooking School, 164 Lexington Avenue, 685-5685.
Instructor: Annemarie Huste.
Cost: $180 for five sessions.
Starting date: Sept. 13; mornings and evenings.
Type: Demonstration.
Description: A casual, once-over-lightly course for beginners, stressing simplified versions of more or less Continental dishes. Demonstrations take place in bright surroundings behind a counter well arranged for good visibility.

James Beard School of Cooking.
Because Mr. Beard is recuperating from an illness, no classes will be conducted in his kitchen until further notice.

Steve Bierman's Cooking Classes, location to be determined, 249-4594.
Instructor: Steve Bierman.
Cost: $240 for eight classes.
Starting date: October or November; evenings.
Type: Participation.
Description: The well-trained instructor is a successful caterer and a serious student of cooking. He tries to give a practical, simplified course in Continental cooking for those who want to learn to cook for themselves, mostly after work, and in short time. Classes will start when new quarters are arranged.

A La Bonne Cocotte, 23 Eighth Avenue, 675-7736.
Instructor: Lydie Pinoy Marshall.
Cost: $90 for four lessons.
Starting date: Sept. 17; mornings and evenings.
Type: Participation.
Description: A no-nonsense French cooking school, and the best in town. Haute cuisine, regional cooking and baking are taught in a handsome, rustic brownstone kitchen well equipped for full participation under the direction of the exacting, uncompromising French-born instructor. Recipes are stylish and the results superb.

Helene Borey School of Creative Cooking, 255 East 71st Street, 249-3883.
Instructor: Helene Borey.
Cost: $180 for six classes.
Starting date: Oct. 13 and 14, mornings and evenings.
Type: Participation.
Description: Practical, entertaining and excellent courses in Northern Italian, French classical and regional cuisines taught in an attractive kitchen that allows for full participation. Cooking techniques, shopping information and presentation of dishes are stressed. Menus are original, the food delicious. Meals after class are served at a beautifully decorated table.

Giuliano Bugialli Cooking School, 201 East 77th Street, 472-0760.
Instructor: Giuliano Bugialli.
Cost: $125 for five lessons.
Starting date: Nov. 1; mornings and evenings.
Type: Limited participation.
Description: Although this school is new, and therefore not yet visited, the instructor has taught for several years at the America-Italy Society cooking school and in Florence with great success. Dishes of his native Tuscany are stressed, with many antique and classical recipes. Pastas and breads are especially interesting.

Chinese Catering 'n Cooking Lessons, 639 West End Avenue, 724-7535.
Instructor: Vung Hwa.
Cost: $75 for five lessons, held on Tuesday evenings.
Starting date: Sept. 21,
Type: Limited participation.
Description: Under her English name, Jean Chen, this instructor teaches at the China Institute and the Culinary Arts Shoppe, but her course was not visited. It stresses the cooking of all Chinese provinces, including Mandarin, Szechuan, Shanghai and Canton. The teacher has worked as chef in several local Chinese restaurants, and emphasizes techniques best suited to party cooking.

China Institute in America, 125 East 65th Street, 744-8181.
Instructors: Florence Lin, Dorothy Lee, Averil Tong and others.
Cost: $75 for nine sessions; gourmet class, $110.
Type: Participation.
Description: This is the granddaddy of the city's Chinese cooking classes, given in a large kitchen auditorium. Dishes of all regions of China taught and students work in teams. However, all classes, whether beginner, intermediate or advanced, are larger than they should be and are best for those who want to see how interested they really are in this cuisine before going on to more expensive, but more private classes. The best course here is Florence Lin's gourmet class.

Madame Chu's Chinese Cooking School, 370 Riverside Drive, 663-2182.
Instructor: Grace Chu.
Cost: $160 for basic seven lessons; $130 for five advanced lessons.
Starting date: Next month; mornings and evenings.
Type: Limited participation.
Description: This 77-year-old doyenne of Chinese cooking teachers was the first to give these courses at the China Institute 26 years ago. Now that she has a small apartment kitchen, she teaches technique by having students practice in the dining area, then going into the kitchen to cook in groups.
Basic and advanced courses cover food of all China with simple home and party dishes.

John Clancy's School of Cooking and Baking, 324 West 19th Street, 243-0958.
Instructor: John Clancy.
Cost: $150 for five workshop classes; $60 for two classes on holiday baking; $75 for two classes on Christmas dinner.
Starting date: Nov. 1; mornings and evenings.
Type: Participation.
Description: An experienced chef, teacher and author, the instructor conducts solidly practical full participation courses in bread, pastry and cake baking, and in Christmas cooking.
Both recipes and instructions are superb. Techniques and reasons-why are stressed.

Cooking With Class, 226 East 54th Street, 355-5021.
Instructor: Janeen Sarlin.
Cost: $120 for six sessions.
Starting date: Sept. 15; mornings, afternoons and evenings.
Type: Limited participation.
Description: Although this is a new course and not visited, the chief instructor is a Midwestern home economist who was observed teaching at the Culinary Arts Shoppe. Her manner is lively, with a certain professional-demonstrator briskness. French recipes tend to be Americanized.

Cooking With Love, Gimbels, East 86th Street and Lexington Avenue, 348-2300.
Instructors: Vary.
Cost: $95 for five classes, $125 for advanced series.
Starting date: Year round; mornings, afternoons and evenings.
Type: Demonstration.
Description: Various teachers give once-over-lightly courses in different international cuisines including French, Italian, Chinese, Japanese, Jewish and Middle Eastern, as well as in baking and party foods.
This is more of a place to get ideas and pass time pleasantly than it is for solid learnings of techniques. Recipes stress equipment sold in the store.

Cooking With Mady, 210 West 101st Street, 850-2404.
Instructor: Mady Brown.
Cost: $80 for five lessons.
Starting date: Late September.
Type: Participation.
Description: An informal, personal course good for absolute beginners and those who prefer a class on the West Side. Participation takes place in a small dinette-foyer under close supervision of the young, cheerful instructor. International techniques and recipes are taught with emphasis on simplicity and more attention is paid to taste than to technique.

Le Cordon Bleu de Paris, Gimbels, Broadway and 33d Street, LO 4-3300.
Instructor: Richard Grausman.
Cost: $40 for three lessons, $75 for six.
Starting date: Next May; mornings, afternoons, evenings.
Type: Demonstration.
Description: Holder of the Grand Diplome of Le Cordon Bleu in Paris, and that school's only authorized representative here, the instructor performs deftly and professionally at a big demonstration counter with a wide tilted mirror overhead that makes his steps easy to follow if you don't get dizzy doing so in reverse.
This is a big auditorium setup, with large classes, and it is difficult to keep attention focused as he goes through menus and recipes that are based on all the classic preparations and techniques of French haute cuisine and bourgeois specialties. Attractive recipe cards are given out for each course.

Culinary Arts Shoppe, 133 East 65th Street, 628-0066.
Instructors: Dorothy Sims, Henry Dubow, Jean-Claude Szrudak, Jean Chen and Ada Shemhait.
Cost: Five-week courses from $75 to $250.
Starting date: Continuous throughout the year; mornings, afternoons and evenings.
Type: Demonstration.
Description: Entertaining courses in French and Chinese cooking, baking, casserole dishes, and in the operation of the Cuisinarts food processor are given in this cookware shop at a demonstration counter that affords best visibility to those sitting closest to the center. Participation is very limited; classes large and attention hard to focus. Recipes stress use of equipment on sale in the shop.

André Dodi Cooking Classes, 333 East 18th Street, 677-8473.
Instructor: André Dodi.
Cost: $80 for four lunch classes, $100 for four dinner classes.
Starting date: Sept. 23; afternoon and evening.
Type: Limited participation.
Description: Another of the teachers working at the American Italy Society cooking school, the instructor operates far less effectively here. His manner is colorful and professional, but he is a bit impatient with student questions, and decidedly inferior ingredients are used, if with apologies.
His North Italian and Continental recipes are unusual and interesting and his basic knowledge of cooking is beyond question, but he is badly directed here.

Madhur Jaffrey, 101 West 12th Street, 924-6287.
Instructor: Madhur Jaffrey.
Cost: $250 for five morning sessions.
Starting date: Next month.
Type: Participation.
Description: The author of a justly popular Indian cookbook, this charming and efficient instructor who formerly was at the James Beard school teaches the cuisine of India to classes limited to four students each. She utilizes full participation for dishes of all regions of India.

Jeannette's Cooking School, 333 Central Park West, 749-8551.
Instructor: Jeannette Seaver.
Cost: $150 for six weekly lessons.
Starting date: Next month; evenings.
Type: Participation.
Description: A pleasant if helter-skelter presentation of French and Continental dishes, both at basic and advanced levels, take place in a very cramped kitchen around a work table that is disorganized and confusing. The French-born instructor's manner is casual and offhanded, and some of her methods are questionable, but there is full participation, French bread is baked at the beginning of each class and the menus are practical and fairly good. A good course for beginners who need confidence.

Marcella Hazan's School of Italian Cooking, 155 East 76th Street, 861-2825.
Instructor: Marcella Hazan.
Cost: $250 for six three-to-four-hour lessons.
Starting date: Applications are being accepted for spring and fall of 1977, current classes having been fully booked; mornings and evenings.
Type: Participation.
Description: The Italian-born instructor has conducted the best Italian cooking course in the city for the last seven years. Full participation takes place around a table in the dining area with cooking forays into the kitchen.
She meticulously teaches all techniques, including the making of pasta by hand or by machine, and stresses Northern Italian recipes with some of the lighter, more sophisticated Southern variations, all with delectable results.

Helen R. Heller, 41 West 58th Street, 688-6093.
Instructor: Helen R. Heller.
Cost: $225 for five 1½-hour lessons.
Starting date: Days and hours by mutual arrangement.
Type: Participation.
Description: For the last 16 years, this stern instructor has taken seriously motivated private students in her small apartment kitchen, teaching them basics they want to learn, such as how to cook for themselves or guests, or specifics such as making soufflés or crepes. Students do the work under her close direction, but her recipes are fairly banal. Still, for a shy beginner with money to spare, this is a possible answer.

Buffet of Many Courses

By MIMI SHERATON

If a proliferation of cooking schools can be regarded as a vital life sign, New York is in great shape. After touring 50 or so in Manhattan alone last season, one gets the feeling that at any given moment in any part of town, hundreds of men, women, teen-agers and children are mastering the art of mincing, puréeing, braising and sautéing, raising soufflés, flipping crepes and rolling out puff pastry, pasta and egg roll skins with speed and agility.

With so many schools to choose from, it stands to reason some will be better than others. For that reason, the schools are this year for the first time described with recommendations to help prospective students choose which best suit their needs and levels of proficiency. The least satisfactory courses have been eliminated from this listing entirely.

The best courses are unquestionably those that require full student participation. Usefulness of demonstration courses varies with the size of the class, and the visibility of both hand techniques and the food as it cooks.

Unless otherwise noted all classes run from two to three hours, the food prepared is served to the students, printed recipes are handed out, and the class size is comfortable; only excessively large or small numbers of students have been noted.

Lydie Marshall with students at A La Bonne Cocotte school, a no-nonsense place that is the best in town.

Lilah Kan's Chinese Cooking Classes, 884 West End Avenue, 749-0550.
Instructor: Lilah Kan.
Cost: $120 for six lessons.
Starting date: November; mornings and evenings.
Type: Participation.
Description: Chinese cooking of all provinces, blue-jeans style, is taught in small but adequate kitchen by this lively teacher who avoids most specialized Chinese cooking equipment and tries to make the whole affair seem clear. Techniques for cutting and use of the cleaver are stressed, with basic sauces and Chinese cooking methods illustrated.
The teacher is an actress who has cooked professionally at Western and Chinese restaurants, and has special appeal for the young and the casual. The atmosphere here is informal and partylike.

Diana Kennedy—Mexican Cooking, c/o Rosengard, 311 West 95th Street, 628-1778.
Instructor: Diana Kennedy.
Cost: $100 per series of four classes for general Mexican cooking; $75 per series of three classes in Yucatecan cooking.
Instructor: Gilda Latzky.
Starting dates: April and May, 1977; mornings, afternoons and evenings.
Type: Limited participation.
Description: The instructor teaches both well-known and recherché dishes of all regions of Mexico. The course's only weakness is the very limited student participation, but the techniques are clearly demonstrated and explained. The food is incomparable and the ingredients and equipment fascinating.

Peter Kump Cooking School, 333 East 69th Street, Apt. 8D, 628-1778.
Instructor: Peter Kump.
Cost: $125 for five 3½-hour sessions.
Starting date: Oct. 21; mornings and evenings.
Type: Limited participation.
Description: Participation takes place around a table outside of the kitchen, but at the class visited; few students went into the kitchen to see the food actually cooking. The well-informed young instructor, whose manner is crisp and efficient if slightly overbearing, stresses basic techniques relating them to specific dishes, and also teaches food shopping, care of equipment and table-setting. The basic menu is French, adapted to American kitchens.

Gilda Latzky Cooking School, 42 East 69th Street, 549-1646.
Cost: $130 for six participation classes.
Starting date: Oct. 4; mornings and evenings.
Type: Participation.
Description: In a big, roomy kitchen on the parlor floor of a townhouse, this young efficient instructor gives solid, practical courses in French, Northern Italian and Chinese cooking and baking. Judging by her recipes and the class observed, the baking is her strong point.

Karen Lee's Chinese Cooking Classes, 142 West End Avenue, 787-2227.
Instructor: Karen Lee.
Cost: $140 for six four-hour sessions.
Starting date: Sept. 13; mornings and evenings.
Type: Participation.
Description: Mrs. Lee's name has led first-time students to think she is Chinese, which she is not. She is a well-trained student of Grace Chu's and uses similar teaching techniques. Most of the cutting goes on around a table in the dining foyer, and students squeeze into the tiny kitchen to watch cooking steps.
She is strict with students and supervises closely. Seasoning here is a little pallid and a little less than authentic, but it is an excellent starter course.

Virginia Lee's Chinese Cooking Classes, 12 Mott Street, 571-0985.
Instructor: Virginia Lee.
Cost: $195 for eight weekly lessons, mornings and evenings.
Starting date: Late September.
Type: Demonstration.
Description: This is beyond doubt the best advanced Chinese cooking course in the city, although it would be even better if it allowed for participation. Still, the room, which is in a picturesque Chinatown garret, is small and the demonstration table easily visible, and anyone advanced enough to take this course will be able to repeat the dishes demonstrated. The food is sensational and the dishes gathered from the most popular regions of China are unusual.

Nan Mabon's New School of Cooking, 186 Riverside Drive, 724-8807.
Instructor: Nan Mabon.
Cost: $100 to $120.
Starting date: Sept. 23, Oct. 27 and Jan. 26, evenings.
Type: Participation.
Description: The young, casual instructor has a well-organized small kitchen. Recipes are classic and sound, but there is too much compromise on the quality of ingredients used and, though students are criticized for using wrong techniques, they are not forced to correct them before continuing.

Marique School of French Cooking, 170 East 83d Street, 879-4229.
Instructor: Isabelle Marique.
Cost: $135 for six sessions.
Starting date: Sept. 14, afternoons and evenings.
Type: Demonstration.
Description: This vivacious instructor is skillfully professional as she demonstrates classic French and "stay-thin" dishes. Unfortunately the class is too large, the demonstration counter too obscured for good visibility, and all of the cooking is behind the scenes in the kitchen. Recipes are standard classics and the instructor tends to stress dishes prepared in the special pans she designs and sells.

Modern Gourmet of New York, 300 East 59th Street, 486-9592.
Instructor: Linda Hunker Wagner.
Cost: $110 to $150 for five lessons, depending on subject.
Starting date: Sept. 27; day and evening.
Type: Participation.
Description: Although this young instructor lacks an air of authority, she gives a very good, solid, clear course in the most elementary basics of classic and Provençal French and Italian cooking, a dinner-against-the-clock course, and another in Viennese baking. Some of her preliminary background information on regional dishes is somewhat questionable, but the cooking instructions are sound and the participation well guided in a normal apartment house kitchen. It is a very good course for beginners.

Moore-Betty School of Cooking, 162 East 92d Street, 860-4922.
Instructor: Maurice Moore-Betty.
Cost: $225 for six weekly lessons.
Starting date: Fall session fully booked; Reservations being taken for January; mornings and evenings.
Type: Participation.
Description: One of the best and most enduring of the city's cooking schools, this one emphasizes menu planning based on international cuisine, with some stress on cooking ahead. The recipes are excellent, the participation kitchen stylish and well laid-out, and the debonair instructor also goes into table setting, the selection of wines and marketing.

Anna Muffoletto's Cordon Bleu of New York, 332 East 84th Stret, New York City, 628-0264.
Instructor: Anna Muffoletto and others.
Cost: $100 to $550.
Starting date: Sept. 14; mornings and evenings.
Type: Participation.
Description: This is really a sort of three-ring circus with courses in Provincial or classic French and Italian cooking. Chinese cooking and wine seminars taught by an assortment of teachers. The basic skills course is justifiably the most popular, taught by Miss Muffoletto. Two work kitchens are crowded and disorganized and the tone casual, but it is a good course for building confidence.

Murray Hill School of Cooking, 125 East 36th Street, 684-4299.
Instructor: Fanny Farkas.
Cost: $120 for six lessons.
Type: Participation. dc
Description: European cooking is taught with emphasis on techniques and basic preparations. Recipes are simplified, sometimes too much so, but the range of dishes is interesting with a number of good ideas for party menus. The friendly but flappable instructor is Swedish and conducts one morning class each week in that language. More emphasis is needed on use of correct equipment.

Riverside Church Arts and Crafts Program, 490 Riverside Drive, 749-8140.
Cost: $90 for 14 weekly sessions.
Starting date: Oct. 4; mornings and evenings.
Type: Participation.
Description: Two courses are given in this rather spaced out, poorly equipped, somewhat bleak church banquet kitchen—one on bread baking and the other on natural foods. The bread baking course is a good buy, but the other isn't very worthwhile.

Herbert Ross School of Cooking, 99 West 27th Street, 675-8159.
Instructor: Herbert Ross.
Cost: $150 for six weekly lessons.
Starting date: Oct. 12; evenings.
Type: Participation.
Description: One of the courses not visited, this stresses practical versions of international dishes for what are described as "serious" students. Dishes listed on well-planned menus are interesting including pasta with clam and green peppercorn sauce, peach calouffi, mushroom croustades and orange ginger Bavarian cream.

Edward Schoenfeld's Chinese Cooking Classes, 250 West 99th Street, Apt. 7C, 666-4422.
Instructor: Edward Schoenfeld.
Cost: $125 for five lessons.
Strating date: Immediately; classes by appointment.
Type: Participation.

CONSUMER NOTES

Food Cooperatives Get Brand-Name Products

By IRVIN MOLOTSKY

It may come as a surprise to many people to learn that food cooperatives may purchase articles from brand-name processors as well as from wholesale produce and meat dealers whose willingness to deal with co-ops is widely known.

For example, Dannon, which makes a popular line of yogurt products, has indicated its willingness to sell to co-ops and will deliver if the orders are large enough.

Dannon is among several concerns offering such a service, according to a list compiled by the New York City Department of Consumer Affairs. The list can be obtained by writing to the department at 80 Lafayette Street, New York, N.Y. 10013.

Some of the suppliers on the list are also willing to sell to individuals not connected with co-ops, although they establish requirements that may attract only the most extremely economy-minded consumers.

For example, those dealing with some vendors at the Bronx Terminal Market must be prepared to make their purchases before dawn. Those seeking to save on coffee, tea or sugar must make their purchases in 100 pound bags. Those who want to purchase sunflower or pumpkin seeds can do so in somewhat smaller quantities; the minimum at one place is 25 pounds.

The Consumer Affairs Department's list also includes the names of food cooperatives in upper and lower Manhattan; the Park Slope, Boerum Hill, Brownsville, Cobble Hill and Brooklyn Heights sections of Brooklyn; several places in the Bronx, including Riverdale, and on Staten Island and in Queens.

The cost-saving advantages of co-ops are well known, as are the disadvantages—picking up the goods and delivering them to members, storage problems and dealing with members who, say, do not find any great advantage in making a killing on the purchase of 50 pounds of kumquats that the co-op's buyer in a particular week found irresistible. For those willing to put up with whatever disadvantages are connected with co-ops, the savings can be substantial.

In a recent week, for example, the Consumer Affairs Department found that co-op prices were 48 percent lower for onions than in food stores, 42 percent lower for potatoes and 17 percent lower for eggs.

Gasoline Survey Points To Best Buy in Boroughs

Another effort by the Consumer Affairs Department has come up with the not-unsurprising news that gasoline costs more in Manhattan than any other borough. But which borough has the least expensive gasoline?

Most New Yorkers probably would guess that Staten Island has the lowest gasoline prices—that borough being the least densely populated and less subject to the urban woes that increase costs. That would be two-thirds correct: Staten Island, according to the Consumer Affairs Department, had the lowest average prices for regular and premium gasoline, but it trailed the Bronx for the lowest price for unleaded regular, which is needed for many newer cars. The citywide average for gasoline was 64.7 cents a gallon for unleaded regular, 62.8 for regular and 68.8 for premium.

The average price by borough in cents per gallon were:

Borough	Unld. Reg.	Reg.	Prem.
Bronx	63.2	62.3	68.6
Brooklyn	64.5	62.3	68.2
Manhattan	67.5	64.9	71.0
Queens	64.9	63.0	69.0
Staten Island	64.7	62.1	68.1

The lesson is clear, according to Elinor Guggenheimer, the head of the Consumer Affairs Department: New York motorists who live outside Manhattan should fill up their tanks before driving into midtown.

Dangerous Pacifiers Found Still in Homes and Stores

Following the death of a 5-year-old baby who choked on a faulty pacifier last February, the Federal Consumer Products Safety Commission issued a recall on the devices. Now, however, it turns out that 38,000 of the potentially hazardous pacifiers are still in stores or in people's homes.

The suspect pacifiers, which normally sell for 45 cents, were made in Spain and are called Chupetes. They were marketed in four series, marked Fauna, Flower, Texas or Navy. The pacifiers are usually sold in plastic and cardboard casings with the name of the series in large letters on the top.

The distributor is La Cibeles Inc. of Union City, N.J., which is cooperating with the Federal agency in the attempt to recall all of the pacifiers.

A toll-free telephone number has been set up for people who believe they have purchased one of the suspect pacifiers. The number is (800) 638-2666, except in Maryland, where the number is (800) 492-2937.

The handle of the pacifier is in the shape of an animal head, a flower or a baby with a cowboy hat or a sailor cap. It was the shield above the handle that apparently caused the child's death.

Lightweight Sports Jackets Present a Fire Hazard

The Consumer Product Safety Commission also issued a warning to people who bought men's and boys' lightweight nylon sports jackets from October to December 1974, from the J.C. Penney chain.

The jackets present a fire hazard to wearers, the commission said, and a Federal District Court in Louisville upheld seizure of the jackets by a Federal marshal.

J.C. Penney cooperated with the Government in recalling the jackets from its stores, but some probably are still in use. The jackets came in green, blue and berry colors and had zippers in the front, the commission said, and a tag inside the neck contained either of the following:

MW Machine wash warm-line dry only - Towncraft Boys - Sports Outer Wear-J.C. Penney-Made in Malasia; or Town 'n' Trail-Made in Singapore.

The hazard came not from the nylon jacket itself, but from the cotton lining, which failed a flammability test, "thus posing an unreasonable risk," the commission said.

Amateur Football Players Are Warned of Injuries

The smell of autumn in the air will doubtless send legions of middle-aged Joe Namaths, O.J. Simpsons, and Larry Csonkas into sandlots along city streets and patches of grass near suburban parkways, but these pigskin Walter Mittys are advised to take it easy.

Injuries related to football now command the No.4 spot on the consumer products hazard list compiled by the Federal Consumer Product Safety Commission (trailing bicycles, stairs and power lawn mowers).

In both organized play (such as in Pop Warner leagues, high schools and colleges) and unorganized competition (such as a pickup two-hand touch game in Central Park), the lack of proper equipment is cited as a primary cause for injury in many cases.

Injuries include broken collarbones for those not using shoulder pads, eye cuts and broken noses for those not wearing helmets and leg bruises for those whose knee pads fail to stay in place.

L.I. Workers Cite G.O.P. Kickbacks

Special to The New York Times

WESTBURY, L.I., Sept. 7—Nine government witnesses testified today that it was common practice to contribute 1 percent of their salaries to the Town of Hempstead Republican Finance Committee, but all of them denied that they had been coerced into doing so

They appeared at the trial of Raymond Graber, the town's deputy commissioner of conservation and waterways, who is charged with having lied to a Federal grand jury investigating alleged kickbacks to the Republican Party.

John Caden, the assistant United States attorney who is prosecuting the case against Mr. Graber, elicited testimony from the nine town employees in efforts to show that they had been coerced into kicking back the 1 percent, allegedly collected by the Department of Conservation and Waterways under Mr. Graber's aegis.

Although all the witnesses stated that it was an accepted practice for town employees to make "contributions" to the party, Yolanda Speranza, who had worked for the Town of Hempstead for eight years, testified in the Federal Court for the Eastern District today that "Mr. Graber would remind us that it was that time of year and that the elephant had his trunk out again."

"I was always reminded by Mr. Graber," she added. "He would come into my office or I went into his office every year and I gave the check to him."

Edwin Gunderson, a supervisor in the Department of Bay Constables, testified that every year in the fall Mr. Graber would give him index cards with employee names, gross salaries and job classifications noted.

"He'd say, 'Eddie, it's that time of year—I percent is due,'" Mr. Gunderson said.

New York's Grocer AGOSTINO'S

From Captain's Galley, Some More of His Dishes

Fish Stock

- 2½ pounds fish bones (may include head of fish with gills removed)
- 2 cups coarsely chopped celery
- 2 cups thinly sliced onions
- 1 whole clove garlic, unpeeled, sliced in half
- 2 cups chopped, well-washed green part of leeks
- 3 sprigs fresh thyme or 1½ teaspoons dried
- 1 bay leaf
- 2 quarts water
- ½ bottle dry white wine
- ¼ teaspoon peppercorns
- ¼ teaspoon anise seeds, crushed
- Salt to taste.

1. Run the bones under cold running water.

2. Place the bones in a kettle and add the remaining ingredients. Bring to the boil and simmer about 20 minutes. Strain.

3. Return the strained stock to the kettle and reduce by half.

Yield: Four to six cups.

Note: Leftover stock may be frozen.

Sweetbread Omelet

The filling:
- 1 pair sweetbreads braised in port wine (see recipe)
- 3 tablespoons butter
- 1 cup finely chopped onions
- 2 cups cubed mushrooms, about half a pound or slightly less
- Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
- 1 teaspoon flour
- ¼ chicken bouillon cube, preferably Knorr Swiss (or use one-quarter cup very rich chicken broth and eliminate the water indicated below)
- ¼ cup water

The omelet:
- 12 to 16 eggs
- 12 to 16 tablespoons heavy cream
- Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste.

1. Cut the sweetbreads into one-inch cubes. There should be about four cups.

2. Heat the butter in a skillet or casserole and add the onion. Cook until wilted and add the mushrooms, sweetbreads, salt and pepper to taste and cook, stirring often, about five minutes. Sprinkle with flour and add the chicken bouillon cube and water. Cook, stirring often, 10 to 15 minutes or until the liquid has evaporated.

3. Use two eggs, one tablespoon of cream, salt and pepper to taste for each omelet and prepare according to any standard recipe. Fill with equal amounts of the sweetbread mixture and turn out onto hot plates.

Yield: Six to eight omelets.

The New York Times

Paul Steindler in the galley aboard the Caraja.

Sweetbreads Braised in Port Wine

- 1 pair of sweetbreads, about one pound
- Port wine to cover
- 2 sprigs fresh thyme or 1 teaspoon dried
- 1 bay leaf.

1. Soak the sweetbreads overnight in cold water to cover. Drain.

2. Place the sweetbreads in a large saucepan and add port wine to cover. Add the thyme and bay leaf. Bring to the boil and simmer five minutes or slightly longer. Drain immediately. Run under cold water and let cool. Trim the sweetbreads by cutting away the connective tissue and cartilage. Chill well.

3. Place the sweetbreads in a dish large enough to hold them and cover with a weight. Weight them down for at least six hours and refrigerate.

Yield: One pair of braised sweetbreads.

WINE TALK

Should U.S. Check Wineries Abro[ad]

By FRANK J. PRIAL

The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms recently advanced a proposal to inspect foreign vineyards and wineries that ship to this country. The purpose would be to insure that their wine conforms to United States standards, particularly with regard to additives.

By law, all foreign wines need papers showing what they are and where they came from before United States Customs agents will release them to an importer. But this is only if the country of export agrees.

Thus, according to the bureau, a lot of foreign wine shows up with no papers. The Customs agents accept it and we drink it all on faith.

In most cases, of course, the major exporters—France, Germany, Italy and Spain—make sure the papers are in order. Some years ago, the United States banned German wines in which a certain fermentation inhibitor had been used. But there was no secret about its use and, once the ban was imposed, the Germans stopped using it, at least in wines shipped here.

Rules Called Inadequate

Still the bureau is wary. "Recently we have become aware of the need for further protection with regard to the content of wines bottled abroad," Rex Davis, the director of the bureau, an arm of the Treasury Department, said recently. "The existing bureau regulations . . . do not appear to provide adequate protection to the consumer against mislabeling of imported wine, particularly as to origin and contents."

Mr. Davis did not say what recent events prompted the bureau's concern. He did say that no overseas vineyard or winery inspections would be made without the winemakers' consent.

Just what this gentlemanly agreement would produce is not clear. In the great Bordeaux wine scandal of a few years back, it was not until the Government inspectors went into the cellars without the owners' permission that anything was turned up.

Previously, by their own admission, they had always given notice as to their arrival. And, to the end, the winemakers expressed outrage that the whole business had been done in such an uncouth fashion.

Winemakers are a notoriously independnt lot. The Frnchmen do not take kindly to their own inspectors of fraud. It would be interesting to see how they might take to ours.

On the other hand it would be unwise to take our wine detectives lightly. In a case that received almost no publicity on the East Coast, the bureau earlier this year moved in and shut down one of the biggest wineries in California for two weeks for watering and mislabeling wine.

> By law, all foreign wines need papers showing what they are —but it applies only if the exporting country agrees to it.

The bureau charged the California Growers Winery at Cutler, in the central part of the state, with 73 violations of Federal law. It said the winery had, among many other things, watered 4,350,000 gallons of wine; bottled almost 7,000 gallons as varietals—that is, wine from a specific grape—when little or none of it was derived from the grapes named on the lab[el] 5,294 gallons with the inc[orrect alco]holic content; bottled [...] with false and misleading [...] bottled 2,292 gallons of [...] wine as "champagne" when [...] entitled to that designation.

Girl, 13, Held in Setting Store Fires

A 13-year-old Bronx girl has been arrested and charged with setting 17 fires in midtown Manhattan stores in recent weeks.

The girl, whose name was withheld because of her age, was apprehended in Macy's Herald Square store after a blaze broke out on the seventh floor of the store on Monday night. She was questioned by members of the arson-explosion squad and subsequently admitted setting fires in Korvettes, Gimbels, Alexander's and Macy's, according to the police.

Chief Edwin Dreher of the arson-explosion squad said that the girl was the "spitting image" of a composite drawing put together last week by the Police Department and that the drawing had helped the police spot the girl. There were no injuries reported in the fires and damage was slight.

The police said that there was no evidence suggesting that the girl had been connected with a previous rash of firebombings and fires in the vicinity during the Democratic National Convention in July.

In the firebombings, the police said, timing devices were used and traces of chemical residue were found. The fires after the convention, they said, could have been set by using nothing more than matches or a cigarette lighter.

The Fuerzas Armadas de Liberacion Nacional Puertorriquena (F.A.L.N.), a Puerto Rican nationalist group, claimed responsibility for the firebombing during the convention.

Chief Dreher declined to discuss any possible motives for the recent store fires, but did say, "There is no reason to believe at this time that this girl is a member of any organized or subversive group."

Police officials said the girl had a history of mental illness and one police source attributed the arson to "urgent feelings" that grew out of her earlier psychiatric problems.

Colombia Hit by Quake

BOGOTA, Colombia, Sept. 7 (Reuters) —An earth tremor with a force of 4 on the 12-point Mercalli scale today struck southern Colombia near the border with Ecuador, the Andean Geophysics Institute said. No damage or casualties were reported.

New York State and Israeli S[chool] Join to Train Americans as [Doctors]

By MOSHE BRILLIANT
Special to The New York Times

TEL AVIV, Sept 7—New Yorkers crowded out of congested medical schools at home will be helped to become physicians by the State of New York in a four-year study program at Tel Aviv University.

The program, patterned after an arrangement between the state and the University of Vermont, is the first involving a school outside the United States. New York State will pay $6,000 a year for each student. The students will pay another $6,000 in tuition but will be eligible for scholarships and loans available to any others in the state.

An innovation in the Tel Aviv University plan requires the students to undertake to work three or four years after graduation in areas of medical need in New York to be designated by the state.

Classes to Start Next Year

Forty students will be admitted annually. Barring hitches, it is planned to start classes in September 1977.

A bill authorizing the arrangement was signed by Governor Carey in July after it was adopted overwhelmingly by the State Legislature. The senate and the board of governors of the university also confirmed it. Still required is a letter of approval by the Israeli Minister of Education, which has been assured.

Academic details are being worked out by the university's Sachler School of Medicine with the Regents of the University of the State of New York. The diplomas of a corporation to be chartered in New York to conduct and operate a graduate school in Tel Aviv will be recognized as equivalent to those of any medical school in the state. The corporation will undertake to raise $2 million for dormitories, lecture rooms and equipment.

The program will be open to all New Yorkers on the basis of academic standards. Students will be selected in New York by an admissions committee to be nominated by the American corporation and to include members of Tel Aviv University.

The project has stirred some controversy here since the four Israeli medical schools—in Jerusalem, Haifa, Beersheba and Tel Aviv—have been accepting only 300 of the 2,000 who a[pply]. [It] is estimated that 1,500 [...] attend medical schools i[n] [...] in Italy.

"Naturally, you're going to get those with criticisms rather than those with compliments. If you took those individual cases and documented them there would probably be two sides to each story.

"But there are situations that our organization doesn't condone," Dr. Martin continued. "Many institutions have failed to provide the needed support to run financial-aid offices. Until the institutions give the support and the Federal Government gives money to support the mandates it places on the financial-aid offices, we will continue to have problems."

The College Board's Student Advisory Committee recommended that a major step toward improving the financial-aid situation would be for Washington to require that a portion of the aid funds be spent to disseminate information about the programs.

The number of pupils in a class is considered by most educators to be a key factor in determining their performance, the largest classes supposedly leading to the least learning.

Thus, it should provide some gratification to residents of Connecticut to know that the average size of elementary-school classes—number of pupils per teacher—was reduced during the last school year.

Results of a survey released recently by the Connecticut Education Association show that the number of pupils for each teacher fell from 23 in 1974-75 to 22.7 in 1975-76.

Almost half of the elementary classes in Connecticut range from 21 to 25 pupils, according to the association. It was found that 1.6 percent of the youngsters were in classes of 30 or more, which the association said "are much too large for meaningful instruction."

Just a few years ago, when many women's colleges were hurrying to become coeducational, some people were predicting that there was no future for such institutions.

Now, the facts indicate otherwise.

The Women's College Coalition, an organization of 70 institutions, is expecting a 3.4 percent increase in the combined undergraduate enrollment of its members.

Such a rate of growth exceeds last fall's increase of 3 percent and is larger than the 1.2 percent enrollment rise that the National Center for Education Statistics projects this year for all private colleges.

When Saturday's child grows up... why does the fun go out of art?

When you are a child, you're encouraged to create for the fun of it. So, what you do is spontaneous and free. But, the conditioning of a controlling world, often diverts a natural talent from taking a natural course, and the pictures you create as an adult can be uninspired and ordinary.

Saturdays at the School of Visual Arts are a very special time. If Saturday's child has to work for a living, we feel he or she should have a good time doing it. We encourage exploration, and experimentation, while concentrating on making the experience of art, fresh and new. We offer a wide variety of courses in Fine Arts (painting, drawing and printmaking), Film and Video Tape, Media Arts (graphic design, illustration, and advertising) and Photography. Develop your talent with the guidance of our highly professional faculty. Put some of the child back in your Saturdays.

Call, write, or come in and talk with one of our special counsellors about our unique programs.

continuing education at COLUMBIA

This fall, Columbia University, one of the world's leading research and teaching institutions, inaugurates a Program for Continuing Education. While continuing education is hardly a new idea, it takes on a different dimension at Columbia as the University offers its scholarly resources, libraries, and distinguished faculty to those people who take learning seriously.

The initial phase of the program begins in early October with a series of non-credit courses in areas of both traditional importance and contemporary interest. Courses range in duration from five to ten weeks, and represent a variety of fields and topics.

- Courses are taught by Columbia faculty.
- All classes meet in the early evenings or on Saturdays.
- Students enrolled in courses may use Columbia's extensive facilities.
- Indoor parking is available on campus, which may also be reached by bus or subway.
- Registration is by mail.
- Fees are moderate.

To find out more about Continuing Education at Columbia, return the coupon or telephone for a bulletin.

DE GUSTIBUS

Ale Lovers: A Yard of Flannel

By CRAIG CLAIBORNE

"The Savoy Cocktail Book" containing cocktail recipes compiled by Harry Craddock, bartender of the Savoy Hotel in London, was published in 1930 and is something of a museum piece. We recently referred to it again and read the hints on cocktail mixing for the novice bartender. The instructions are as follows:

"1. Ice is nearly always an absolute essential for any cocktail.

"2. Never use the same ice twice.

"3. Remember that the ingredients mix better in a shaker rather larger than is necessary to contain them.

"4. Shake the shaker as hard as you can; don't just rock it; you are trying to wake it up, not send it to sleep."

We made reference to the book pursuant to a letter from Marshall M. Reisman of Manhattan who asked, "Do you have a recipe for a well-spiced rum beverage that was popular in the early eighteen-hundreds, which was called either a 'flip' or a 'yard of flannel'?"

The Savoy book explained that "the flip, particularly the variety made with rum, is renowned as an old fashioned drink of great popularity among sailors. It is usually made in the following manner:

RUM FLIP

1 egg
½ tablespoon powdered sugar glass [2-ounce] of rum, brandy, port wine, sherry or whisky.

Shake well and strain into a medium-size glass. Grate a little nutmeg on top. In cold weather a dash of powdered ginger can be added."

The book then proceeds to a recipe for an ale flip, and we presume with some assurance that this is the drink known as a "yard of flannel." The name, we deduce, comes about in that the drink is made by pouring back and forth from one jug to another, one jug raised high above the other. This is that recipe:

ALE FLIP

"Put on the fire in a saucepan one quart of ale, and let it boil; have ready the whites of two eggs and the yolks of four, well beaten up separately; add them by degrees to four tablespoonfuls of moist sugar, and half a nutmeg. When all are well mixed, pour on the boiling ale by degrees, beating up the mixture continually; then pour it rapidly backward and forward from one jug to another, keeping one jug raised high above the other, 'til the flip is smooth and finely frothed." The bartender adds "This is a good remedy to take at the commencement of a cold." Another presumption: We believe the "moist sugar" referred to is brown sugar.

Join the fun every day... right in your own home. Just call toll-free 800-325-6400 for convenient, dependable home delivery of The New York Times. Home delivery is available through independent route dealers for an extra service charge in most parts of the New York metropolitan area and in key cities throughout the United States.

Bridge: A Modest Player Triumphs And Keeps Identity Secret

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

It is widely believed that there are no modest bridge players—at any rate in the higher echelons of the tournament world. If there is such a player, he has so far failed to come forward and claim the honor.

There was some reason to think that there was a modest player in the Spring Nationals in Kansas City, but he might have had something to be modest about. An anonymous gentleman achieved a rare technical triumph on the diagramed deal from a Swiss team match, but neglected to report his wizardry to the assembled journalists. This duty was carried out by one of his opponents, Ganesan Sekhar of Winnipeg, Manitoba.

The opening bid of one spade was passed around to South, who ended the auction with a jump bid to four hearts. West led the spade king and had a problem at the second trick.

South Wins With Queen

A shift to a red suit would have been best, but this was hard to judge and in practice he played the club ace followed by another club. South won with the queen and played trumps to force out the queen. After East's diamond return, taken by the ace, South played two more trumps to reach this position:

WEST

EAST
◊ 10 9 4 3

When South led another trump, West was helpless. He could not part with either king without giving dummy a trick, and when he threw a club, South simply played that suit, establishing a winner in his hand to make the last trick.

Sekhar, sitting East, subsequently reported that his partner had been the victim of a rare position, a triple trump squeeze. The fact that South failed to take the credit might be due to his innate modesty, or to the fact that had no idea what he had accomplished and was content to be modest about his ignorance.

Both sides were vulnerable. The bidding:

West led the spade king.

accused of violating the laws he helped to write. He was also charged with advising prospective adoptive parents to withhold information — specifically, the amount of money they paid for their babies — from caseworkers conducting routine interviews.

Mr. Terner publicly denounced the grand jury investigation several months ago when he learned that some of his clients were being interviewed. He was out of town and unavailable for comment today, but his secretary said he would be available tomorrow.

The attorney had previously said he had volunteered to testify before the grand jury but had been turned down. This was confirmed by Mr. Woodcock today, but the Prosecutor said Mr. Terner wanted immunity in return for his cooperation.

Those indicted, besides Mr. Terner, were Harry D. Cohen of Chicago, Bernard Lampear of Southfield, Mich., Harold Rosenstein of New York City, J. George Ivler and Enid Ivler of Paterson, and Robert Ackerman of Port Murray.

The indictments covered the illegal placement of 11 babies and the payment of more than $48,000 by adoptive parents in transactions that dated to 1972. Mr. Woodcock said the investigation would be continued by a new grand jury.

Most of the others interviewed—like the class bookkeeper who has become an accountant or the compulsive studier who has cracked up—have so far fulfilled the destinies one could have easily predicted. Certainly none of them is extraordinary in a specially extraordinary way. Certainly none is enjoying fruits of "a golden era," or even "the greening of America."

Nor does "What Really Happened . . ." seem much more significant than it does unsurprising. The sampling is scanty, barely representative of a class of five hundred or so, let alone of an entire generation. One learns remarkably little about the subjects' backgrounds, roots or histories. (Is this because, being Californians, they have no roots or histories?) Indeed, an unsympathetic reader could accuse Mr. Medved and Mr. Wallechinsky of attaching more significance to their high-school class than it is worth, not to speak of working up excess lather over what is after all scarcely the final word on their classmates' histories.

Getting to Know Them Better

All the same, I found "What Really Happened . . ." extremely engaging. Partly this was because the authors do such a good job of dramatizing their subjects' lives with skillfully edited autobiographical statements and shrewdly arranged cross-references. (By the time you are a little way into the book, you want to know these people better. At the end, when you witness their 10th reunion, you feel you do know them, almost as well as you knew your own high-school class.) Partly it was the fun of playing "whatever-became-of-so-and-so and why?"—of poring over the many then-and-now photographs, and figuring out how a gang leader could have turned into a clothing entrepreneur ("We've had a great impact in the slacks business. We've helped to develop that wider leg. Almost every part of it, we've made some important statement."), or an engineer into a Hare Krishna follower.

Or maybe it's just that what with high school having been such a miserably ill-shaped and ill-defined time for most of us, it's just gratifying to bear witness to all the coalescing and defining—the emergence of muscle from baby fat, of passion from promiscuity, or even of madness from compulsiveness. Of course half the fun of comparing one's own high-school class's past and present lies in seeing how one's own perceptions have changed and crystalized. So it's all the more to the credit of Mr. Medved and Mr. Wallechinsky that they have made a group of strangers interesting to look at then and now.

MAGIC

William Goldman

besides being a bestselling novelist, is a superb screenwriter (All the President's Men, A Bridge Too Far). But he's never written anything more thrilling or suspenseful than this new novel.

MAGIC is the story of Corky Withers, the quintessential 98-pound weakling. Corky is the kind of guy who got into correspondence with Charles Atlas; the kind who went out for football and went straight to the hospital. But Corky was good at something: card tricks. Unfortunately, not that many people were crazy about card tricks. So Corky added a twist to his act.

The twist gets Corky on Mike Douglas, Dinah Shore, the Carson show, and into a harrowing psychological dilemma that "kept me up half the night... A brilliantly alarming novel."—Jane Clapperton, Cosmopolitan.

"As a cinematic novelist William Goldman is in a class by himself. He writes equally effectively for print and the screen. In his new novel, he makes what seems to me his most spectacular effort at demonstrating both talents simultaneously. MAGIC gives us another version of evil possession... Here, however, it is employed more subtly than in 'The Exorcist'... and is a vastly more professional piece of writing."—John Barkham Reviews.

Embattled Schools . . .

Vacations are over. This week and next, pupils across the country are entering, or returning to, school. They may go back with mixed feelings; but as they look toward a new school year, few are likely to experience the sense of gloom that seems to affect the adult view of education's present state.

A Connecticut teacher spokesman complained about the public perception of education: "There is a lessening of priorities. . . . People don't seem to want to put their heart and soul behind education as they did a few years ago . . ."

That perception of a national mood seems quite accurate. The schools are not as close to politicians' and voters' hearts as they were in the expansive years of baby boom and burgeoning suburbs, when real estate values rose in direct proportion to a community's reputation for good schools. Little remains, too, of America's intellectual contest with the Soviet Union, after the launching of Sputnik in 1957.

Education has less political sex appeal now that suburbs are growing old, enrollments decline and schools must be closed rather than built. The recession has cut deep into budgets. Taxpayer resistance is strong, largely because the schools are frequently the only tax item on which taxpayers can vote directly.

Embattled, or neglected, as the schools appear at the moment, it nevertheless seems to us that politicians who assume that education occupies a place of lesser priority on most families' agenda are deluding themselves. For the parents of nearly 50 million pupils the priority has not lessened—nor has it, one should expect, for the grandparents and others interested in America's coming generations.

The schools' problems are real, and so is the declining political consciousness of those problems. Revival of broad popular and political support is essential. For the moment, much could be accomplished by a more rational approach to school financing—better state aid formulas (as actively sought in a continuing court challenge in New York) and improved Federal support to relieve local taxpayers of excessive burdens. Equally important is a more flexible and inventive look by educators at ways of improving the schools—harnessing community resources, volunteers and students-as-teachers; using television and other teaching devices; reforming teacher-training and deployment.

A long-term retreat from public education would be a threat to American democracy and therefore a national tragedy. No economic, political, or pedagogical realities could justify such a retreat.

. . . and Campuses

The by now almost chronic warnings about the fiscal crisis of the nation's colleges and universities are not phony cries of "wolf"; they point to an all-too-real wolf closing in on the campuses, while the public fails to heed the warnings.

In 1971, a study by the Carnegie Commission was aptly labeled "The New Depression in Higher Education." In the five years that followed, about 200 colleges ceased operations or had to merge with other institutions. Now, an even more intensive survey, commissioned by Change Magazine, reports that almost half of the nation's institutions of higher learning are in a "less than healthy" fiscal state, while some 300, or 14 percent of the total, approach insolvency and may not survive without aid.

These findings indicate that financial difficulties are not confined to any single type of institution. Even though it is among the private colleges that the crunch is most severely felt, an increasing number of publicly financed institutions have drifted into deep budget trouble. Hardest hit appear to be two categories: those campuses that expanded dramatically in the 1960's, often moving too rapidly into graduate programs; and relatively isolated small colleges for whom an enrollment drop of only 100 students can spell disaster.

Such dismal findings should not suggest that every college that has come on hard times deserves to be rescued by some magic infusion of private or governmental aid. The study shows clearly that many institutions, though "less than healthy," might well be "turned around by good management."

It would nevertheless be the height of irresponsibility to pretend that higher education can struggle out of what is by now a chronic depression without the help of effective national strategies. It is not by chance that the colleges' decline began when the Nixon Administration turned its back on higher education. The recession affected all American enterprises, but few were shown as little sympathy as the campuses.

New policies are needed to avert permanent harm to the nation's intellectual, scientific, technological and economic strength. Those policies must aim at halting the tuition inflation which threatens to create new social stratifications based on ability to pay; they must assure every qualified student of access to higher education and maximum choice of the institution best suited to each; they must design subsidies aimed at rewarding quality, effective management and public service.

The search for solutions to higher education's problems ought to be one of the high-priority issues of the Presidential election campaign. How could a candidate claim concern about America's future without providing new hope for the campuses where future generations seek wisdom and competence.

The New Cadets

And now for the good news from West Point.

Beast Barracks (the tough initiation into the Academy) is over, and 103 of the 119 women who entered the Military Academy on July 7 completed with their male classmates the long march with full packs and rifles from the field back to the main campus to take a salute from the Academy's Superintendent, Lieut. Gen. Sidney B. Berry. Though the female dropout rate was higher than that for males, fewer women were driven out of the corps by the long hard summer than military officials had expected.

So far, it seems clear that the opposition to women at West Point was as unwarranted as the view of the Congressman who derided the proposal for a Women's Army Corps in a debate 34 years ago by saying, "Take women into the armed service, who will do the cooking, the washing, the mending, the humble homey tasks to which every woman has devoted herself?" The homey tasks still got done and the Army survived.

And so, we suspect, will West Point. The expressions on the faces of the women who successfully completed basic training suggest that many of them did not just try harder "because we have to make it for succeeding classes of women," as one of them put it; they simply enjoyed their new roles as cadets.

Clean Air, Low Priority

After all the laborious effort that has gone into amending the Clean Air Act of 1970, there is an acute danger that heavy pressures from both the automobile industry and the utilities, coupled with remarkably inept scheduling, will scuttle the entire legislation.

The consequence of this inexcusable failure would be twofold and contradictory: The air over some of the pristine areas of the West would be left subject to serious degradation from coal-burning plants, but the motor companies would get no extension of the deadlines currently prescribed for limiting auto emissions of hydrocarbons, carbon monoxide and oxides of nitrogen.

In this complicated situation, the utility lobbyists see everything to gain from delay. With Congress scheduled to adjourn Oct. 2 and a great deal of complex legislation still ahead, they can all but feel relief from the prospect of having to install such costly technology as "scrubbers" in order to meet the requirement of maintaining the quality of air that is still above nationally prescribed standards.

From the auto industry a more devious strategy is to be feared. If its Congressional champions could manage to sever the emission amendments from the rest of the bill, they would stand a good chance of getting their extensions on a separate vote. Both sets of lobbyists would have gained by the maneuver—but the nation's health would have suffered a setback.

Representatives Maguire of New Jersey and Waxman of California have brought in amendments concerning auto emissions which, for all their comparative stringency, make excellent sense in view of the scientifically established damage that is now being imposed on the American people by automobile pollution. They call for compliance with the full statutory standards in 1981.

Should the Maguire-Waxman amendments fail, the less demanding recommendations of the Commerce Committee itself would be a reasonable compromise, if not a wholly adequate response to the problem. If action is taken quickly, there would then still be the time and the likelihood of reconciling the House bill with the measure already passed by the Senate. But there can be no excuse, after all that is now known on the subject, for the House to accept the far slacker requirements embodied in the Dingell-Broyhill amendments, which would effectively repeal the standard for nitrogen oxides altogether.

If the House fails now to produce a sound set of changes in the Clean Air Act, it will be hard for the country to avoid the impression that there is more to the failure of its leadership than what Representative Rogers of Florida calls "ludicrous scheduling." That leadership surely knows what it is doing—and must be prepared to take the political consequences.

Partition at Panmunjom

Partitioning of a territory is not an ideal solution to a problem of recurring violence but it is sometimes the least unsatisfactory way out of a chronically dangerous situation. So it should be with the new agreement for partitioning the joint security area at Panmunjom between the forces of North Korea and those of the American-led United Nations Command.

If there were hopes that the mingling of guards from the Stalinist North Korean regime with their American and South Korean counterparts would allay suspicions and build a climate for constructive negotiation, they were dashed soon after the armistice agreement was signed in 1953. During that first year of the agreement, the United States proposed partitioning the zone to halt a series of troop clashes, but North Korea rejected the idea.

This time it was North Korea that suggested partition in negotiations scheduled after the brutal murder of two American Army officers in the dispute over the pruning of a tree in the truce zone Aug. 18. Under the new agreement, the zone, which is only 800 yards deep, will be bisected by a raised pavement. Guards will be required to stay on their own side of the line and four North Korean guard posts will be removed from the southern part of the area.

The most encouraging aspect of a generally disquieting situation is that, obviously, neither party desired to escalate the tree-pruning episode into a major crisis. After a show of air and naval strength in the area, Washington chose to interpret President Kim Il Sung's mildly worded statement of regret for the incident as "a positive step." North Korea then revived the American partition plan, leading to the pact concluded this week.

It would be comforting to believe that the climate that produced the agreement presages serious negotiations for the long-overdue Korean peace settlement. In the absence of a clear-cut North Korean renunciation of military conquest of the south, however, the United States has no alternative to helping South Korea defend its territorial integrity.

Letters to the Editor

Of Medicaid, Fraud and Health-Care Providers

To the Editor:

The Senate committee revelations of flagrant and widespread fraud by doctors involved in the Medicaid program raise a serious question: "What is the medical profession itself going to do to put a stop to such chicanery and misuse of public trust and funds?"

David Rosenbaum's analysis in the Sept. 2 Times emphasized the needs for tighter controls at Federal, state and local levels, new legislation, etc. However, there was nary a word about what kind of professional ethics this involved on the part of doctors. Or what responsibilities the medical profession had or should have taken to clean up this mess as quickly as possible. Should not an M.D.'s license be suspended or revoked for such grossly unprofessional avarice as we've been shown?

If this medicine is too strong for the Medicaid chiseler, at least county, state and national professional societies should organize their own ethics boards to expose and discipline these culprits. They can get to the bottom of this more quickly than Washington investigators.

Lawyers and accountants have self-policing professional groups. Let's hear what the doctors will do—they are the knaves in this scandal.

To the Editor:

Senator Moss' idea to prove Medicaid fraud by faking a complaint strikes me as—to say the least—simplistic and naive. Any medical student learns that the treatment of a patient starts with a carefully taken history. No one can expect a physician to make the diagnosis of "a healthy individual" within the framework of one office visit, especially if the patient lies to the doctor. As any experienced physician knows, it is much more complicated and costly to disprove an organic disease than to make the diagnosis of appendicitis or tonsillitis. It may take several thousand dollars' worth of tests to prove the psychogenic origin of some complaints, and the same holds true for complaints that are completely faked.

This particular Medicaid clinic may very well be out to make a buck, but from Senator Moss' experience one can only conclude that he received a careful, comprehensive and free check-up, something that seems to be the right of every citizen.

To the Editor:

A national health service in the United States is certainly a humanitarian goal. But how can one possibly support such a concept when the Government has proved itself so completely incompetent in the administration of our present social services and so many of the medical profession seem to have abdicated both the professional and the ethical standards we have been accustomed to expect from them? My compliments to Senator Moss and his staff for their persistence in uncovering the current Medicaid abuses.

Now if we can only go on to uncover, with equal persistence, the waste and corruption in other departments of our Government and begin to do something about it, we will be making progress.

Surely we have the ability. So what are we waiting for?

Mark Podwal

To the Editor:

As a past president of the Medical Society of the County of New York, and an officer of the Medical Society of the State of New York, I am intrigued by your Aug. 31 editorial in which you state that "organized medicine has a special responsibility to give support to administrative and legal actions against unscrupulous practitioners." This refers to the exposé of Medicaid abuses.

"Organized medicine" was discouraged from lending its limited power to help correct the inevitable abuses which we predicted and which have come to pass. It was suggested to the Social Security Administration that organized medicine could have some leverage if it were obligatory for all practitioners to be members of organized medicine through their state societies. The reason for membership is that the only "power" organized medicine has is to deprive a physician of such membership, of course after due process, and thereby control the individual's participation in any scheme of medical care.

The foregoing is just a hint of what could be. It is not so because there has been interference with the practice of medicine by lay persons whose interest is primarily political and materialistic. Add to this the burden placed on the practitioner of medicine to be involved in matters but indirectly related to medical care, such as slum clearance, sociological imperfections and other essential areas, and one has what today is an industry and not a profession.

Organized medicine is more than willing and able to cooperate "to the fullest in governmental and judicial efforts to rid its ranks of practitioners who, by their disregard of ethics, have forfeited any protection and respect peers." To do so, however, the tools to perform the Those tools can only come who have the ability to pr Unfortunately, in today's profession and particularl medicine is denigrated, made the "fall guy" for wh in our mores and political publication, to my surprise the crowd in their houndi fession unlike any other necessity is vital to all ou

Bella Abzug's Way

To the Editor:

Bella Abzug has announced that if Daniel Moynihan wins the nomination she will not support him in his drive to unseat Senator James Buckley.

In other words, she would not use her considerable influence with a great many voters to urge them to support the Democratic nominee against the Conservative-Republican incumbent, implying that she would rather they do not vote or perhaps vote against Mr. Moynihan.

Ms. Abzug's repeated criticism of Mr. Moynihan is that, though a Democrat, he accepted a post under the Nixon-Ford Administration. This sounds like specious criticism when one realizes that Ms. Abzug would be directly aiding the re-election campaign of Senator Buckley, a man in many ways to the right of even Nixon or Ford.

My reaction to Ms. Abzug's announcement is that she is simply being vindictive and hypocritical.

JULIUS HELLER
Kew Gardens, N. Y., Aug. 30, 1976

To the Editor:

Why the brouhaha over Bella Abzug's forthright announcement of non-support for Daniel Moynihan, should the latter win the Democratic Senatorial primary? Mrs. Abzug, Ramsey Clark and Paul O'Dwyer have all been nailing Mr. Moynihan, properly, as a Nixon apologist and Vietnam hawk. A hypocritical turnaround that puts politics ahead of principle is not, thank God, Bella Abzug's way. The wonder is that it's Ramsey Clark's and Paul O'Dwyer's.

Oil Divestiture: Questionable Opp

To the Editor:

W. T. Slick Jr., a senior vice president of the Exxon Corporation, in his Aug. 27 Op-Ed article, argues forcibly that the facts do not warrant or support present Congressional efforts at divestiture of the oil industry.

In support of his position, Mr. Slick states that critics of the industry "profess to see something sinister in the existence of integration" and then proceeds to support his arguments by using industry statistics indicating the large number of competitors at each functional level (i.e., production, refining, transportation and marketing).

After stating the obviously vested interest position of Exxon as objective reasons for opposition to oil industry restructuring, Mr. Slick attempts to support his case by stating that "more than 300,000 retail outlets offer motor gasoline — over 90 percent of them operated by individual proprietors who are independent, self-employed businessmen." He further states in support of opposition of divestiture that "retail gasoline sales by the smaller or private brand chains have risen from around 20 percent of total U.S. sales in 1968 to almost 30 percent today." Mr. Slick is a high-ranking employee of the world's largest oil company, and it troubles me to find him so misinformed — further indication, I believe, of why a large number of citizens find it difficult to believe big oil.

By law the Federal Energy Administration is required to report monthly to Congress on the market share of various parts of our domestic oil industry. The most recent monthly report, for May 1975, prepared by the F.E.A. shows that rather than 300,000 retail outlets there are 200,000 (199,800, to be ex rather than an absurd 3 total U.S. sales, private keters have less than 1 total U.S. gallonage (9.9 t

The Use of Basic Research

BOSTON—Some years ago, Prof. Bruce Ames, a University of California molecular biologist, noticed a list of chemical preservatives on a bag of potato chips that his young son had asked him to open. His concern about the possible health hazards of the chemicals led to what proved to be a futile search for relevant information.

Further, he found that existing procedures to identify potentially dangerous chemicals were time-consuming, expensive and often unreliable. It has been estimated that a complete test of the carcinogenic potential in mice of one chemical costs about $100,000 and requires three years. Mr. Ames decided to attempt to devise more satisfactory ways for detecting carcinogens. While his previous research in bacterial genetics had not been conducted with medical problems in mind, it made possible his developing an ingenious laboratory test for measuring the capacity of chemicals to cause mutations in bacteria.

The test is simple, relatively inexpensive, and requires only 48 hours. Because almost all chemicals that cause cancer in animals and man produce mutations in bacteria, the Ames test increasingly serves as an "early-warning" system for chemical carcinogens. As such, it will likely stand as one of the most significant advances in cancer research of our time.

There is now widespread debate in the Congress and outside concerning the wisdom of devoting precious health resources to basic biological research. Definitions of basic and applied research vary. In the current context, the first refers to research of a fundamental nature without obvious "practical" significance; the second to research that applies available information to human health problems. Some ask whether our society would be better served if all available research money were designated to apply existing knowledge to the conquest of disease. Others state that the quest for knowledge as an end in itself is an essential component of a free society. While I subscribe to the latter view, I believe that there are also compelling pragmatic arguments for continuing support of first-rate basic research. Some important points emerge from the Ames story.

Basic research provided the insights —the possible relation of bacterial mutations to mammalian cancer—and the technology—bacteria very sensitive to chemical mutagens—essential to the development of the Ames test. Fresh insights are now urgently needed for other pressing medical problems. Those who believe that a series of crash programs would lead to ready cures of cancer, heart, vascular, emotional and mental diseases are sadly misled. The essential pieces of background information are not merely awaiting assembly; most have yet to be discovered. While some problems are so pressing that society may decide on expensive crash programs even if they are long shots, most will fail.

The research that led to the Ames test was directed at understanding basic biologic processes and for years had no apparent connection to cancer. Many of the insights that will lead to progress in dealing with other human diseases will also surely come from unexpected directions. Some now ask for "relevance" as a condition of support of young people seeking careers in biological reasearch. Such insistence 25 years ago would have deprived us of the knowledge necessary for the development of the Ames test.

Collages by Peter Bramley

In advancing a case for support of basic research, I surely do not argue for maintaining the status quo. For example, it would be unwise to ignore another lesson of Ames's story: The application of his research to the cancer problem occurred by the chance of his own curiosity. Its relevance was not appreciated earlier by the many applied researchers studying chemical carcinogenesis, reflecting inadequate communication between basic and applied scientists. To minimize delays resulting from the separation of basic and applied research, we must build bridges between the two within our universities and outside.

Further, I agree with those who criticize us in the biomedical research community for neglect of many health problems accorded high priority by society. Large segments of our population do not have access to health care, and too little attention has been given to the quality and costs of care. Young people who might have welcomed career opportunities in dealing with such problems have looked in vain for role models, at a time when much prestige was accorded those doing basic research. However, if previous shortcomings lead us to neglect our continuing responsibility to the search for new knowledge in biology, we, and our children, will be the losers.

Too Much Too Soon

By William V. Shannon

WASHINGTON—As America's children return to school, many conscientious parents are genuinely uncertain whether they may be delivering their children into enemy territory.

Their concern is not academic instruction but the values and opinions, the tastes and expectations that older children in the sixth through twelfth grades acquire from one another. These values are quite different from those that loving parents try to inculcate. They comprise what might be termed the "new sophistication."

These newer values arise from the adult society, are diffused through movies, records and magazines, and enforced among older children and adolescents by peer-group pressure. Schools are enemy territory because it is there that children congregate, that family-held standards are subverted, and children are coerced by their equals to conform to different standards.

The new sophistication involves introducing children at ever younger ages to marijuana, hard drugs, alcohol and sexual experience. The first tentative explorations of the adult world that used to be thought of as college-age experiences are now commonplace in junior high school. Girls of 13 and 14 who refuse to engage in sexual intercourse are accused of being "frigid." Boys of the same age who refuse to try marijuana or alcohol are ridiculed as cowards.

The new sophistication made its appearance more than a dozen years ago. Historically, it is related to the spread of the drug subculture from the black slums to the white middle classes, the invention of the birth control pill, and the rebellious attitudes of the 1960's.

But it is more than a passing phenomenon of the 60's. Its evil effects can be seen today in the grim statistics on suicide, now the second leading cause of death among persons aged 13 to 24 and occurring at a rate twice what it was a decade ago. It can be seen, too, in the skyrocketing rates of venereal disease, drug addiction and alcoholism among the young.

Parents dread losing their children to one of these self-destructive courses. But even the most conscientious parents cannot fully screen their children against these dangers. Much of America's popular culture adds up to a conspiracy to destroy the innocence of youth and to force upon children premature knowledge and ways of acting that they can understand intellectually but not cope with emotionally.

There has always been some tension between the moral ideals of a family and the cynicism of a corrupt world. In 1910, a boy might dream of running away with the circus or a girl think of going off to a big city. But those were relatively innocent daydreams.

Even in the 1930's, when movies and radio had become powerful value-forming instruments penetrating the defenses of family and community, children were protected by the self-censorship of the entertainment industries. Popular magazines usually gave Hollywood stars a scrubbed-up image. Now privacy is a lost value. Is there anything left to learn about Mick Jagger or Richard Burton?

If yesterday's popular culture was intrusive, today's is pervasive. A child can hardly escape the popular music spread by inexpensive records and transistor radios. Movies, popular magazines and, increasingly, television have become recklessly explicit, purveying a pornography of sex and violence. Nothing is left to the imagination. On the contrary, budding imaginations are deadened and deformed by the relentless pounding of vivid images. On screens big and small and over the airwaves come the messages: If it can be experienced, experience it. If you want to do it, do it!

The distinctive theme of this new sophistication is the absence of restraint. But good families frame their children's lives with love—and with restrictions. These restraints are not idle do's and don'ts. They represent accumulated folk wisdom aimed at the child's self-preservation, at protecting him against dangers he cannot fully recognize or foresee. But how to enforce these restraints when so much of the culture argues against any limits, any discipline, any self-denial?

The struggle by parents and teachers against these demoralizing tendencies, an unequal struggle at best given the power of the popular culture, involves the reversal of much that is now fashionable in families and schools. Parents have to be unafraid to make up their own minds and assert their natural authority. They have to stop plying their children with gadgets; every year that a child is denied his own television, his own stereo set, his own transistor radio is a year gained.

Teachers have to halt their headlong flight from intellectual and moral standards and make schools once again places of challenge and decorum. A return to sexually segregated schools from the sixth grade on would free adolescents of both sexes from unwholesome pressures during school hours, leaving "socialization" for evenings and weekends. This is a reactionary idea but, as many parents would agree, a reaction is overdue.

Capitalism's Fate

By Michael Harrington

Capitalism is stumbling toward its end, which will come, not with a bang but with a whimper.

At first glance, this is a particularly preposterous statement to make at this point in American history. Even though the nation is just recovering from the deepest economic downturn since the 1930's, and the revival is accompanied by intolerably high levels of unemployment, all the economic indicators are pointing upward.

Under such circumstances, when capitalism in this country is proving its resiliency, how can one talk of an impending doom?

One reason is that the capitalists who preside over this incipient prosperity are members of a kept class. This is illustrated in their drive to get the Federal Government to put up the "risk" capital for American industry while the profits remain private.

This is the program of the New York Stock Exchange, the Chase Manhattan Bank and other pillars of the system. There is, they say, a capital shortage. As a result, the corporations do not have enough money to invest in the nation's future (why they should determine that future is another issue).

Therefore, Washington should cut back on social spending, hold the line on wages and legislate a higher rate of profit by means of new tax privileges for capital gains, dividend income and the like. The average taxpayer's burden would be increased as that of the wealthy, who own most of the stock in America, is lightened.

When, for instance, the corporate campaigners call for "more realistic" depreciation allowances, the innocent might think that they actually want to more closely link those allowances with the actual life of the machines they theoretically value. The sophisticated know that they simply want bigger, faster—more unrealistic—tax reductions.

It was not always this way. Once upon a time, capitalists were brutal innovators and competitors—robber barons, to be sure, but barons. They were, of course, vicious foes of the working people and, especially in the United States, summoned the armed and repressive power of the state to put down anyone who resisted their will. And yet they took risks and raised the productive powers of the society.

Ironically, when Marx paid his respects to this capitalist accomplishment in the Communist Manifesto, he got so carried away with this praise that he exaggerated the success of his own mortal foes.

But then capitalism was forced to reform itself as workers educated the monied elite in some of the ABC's of social decency. At first, the corporate class dogmatically fought against its own salvation and excoriated its savior, Franklin D. Roosevelt. But then it learned that a Federal agency following corporate priorities can be much gentler to businessmen than the invisible hand of Adam Smith's market.

Moreover, since executives were indeed in control of the investment—which is to say the job-generating—process, they were able to persuade the society that it was in the interests of the common good to pamper the rich with privileges whose bounty would then trickle down to the rest of us.

So there were billions in subsidies to stock speculators in the form of special treatment for capital gains; enormous handouts for the housing of the rich; massive give-aways to truckers through the interstate highway system; and, above all, hundreds of billions of dollars in direct and indirect outlays for multinational energy companies, which responded to this largesse by making the nation unnecessarily vulnerable to the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries cartel.

These measures are objectionable in and of themselves. They also explain how American capitalists became a parasitic and decadent class. That class will die in one of two ways (or, given the sloppiness of history, through a combination of both).

The corporation will become so completely integrated with the state that the executive will turn into a commissar, an American commissar, to be sure, much more liberal and polite than the Soviet, but a commissar nevertheless.

Or else, the people might realize that the governmental mechanism that now allocates resources to maximize corporate profit could, if it is thoroughly democratized, be used to maximize social needs.

In either case, the system, even as it now recovers from the recession, is lurching toward a rather ignominious end.

Michael Harrington, who is national chairman of the Democratic Socialist Organizing Committee, is author of "The Other America," "Socialism" and, most recently, "The Twilight of Capitalism."

Gradually, largely because it can transport wood year-around, trucking has replaced the river drive as a way of supplying the paper industry with its growing demand for wood pulp.

"It was just gtting more and more difficult to drive the volume we needed," explained Arthur Stedman, the assistant woodlands manager for Scott's Northeast operations. "It's just more economic to go by truck."

Scott had decided back then, he said, to build its new kraft-process pulp mill at Hinkley, 13 miles upriver, and to use tree-length wood that, because of the power dams, can no longer be sent down the river. The plant will handle some 520,000 cords of pulpwood a year, about 1,500 more a day than the old mill.

In the old days, the woodsmen, clad in layers of red flannel shirts and caulked boots, lived in rough camps in the woods. Lumber was cut in the summer and fall. With the winter, snow was packed down to form roads and the felled trees were hauled out by horses and stacked, surrounded by booms, on frozen lakes.

When the thaw came, the rafts of logs were towed to the outlets and dumped into the running water, joined by other logs set along tributaries. In boats or sometimes standing on the wood, the men would work with poles or peavy hooks, a pole with a spike and clamp arrangement used to turn logs over, to prevent jamups. A jam, which would sometimes take dynamite to loosen, could unleash tremendous, sometimes fatal force. The logs would be caught by booms set below and eventually fed into a mill.

Today, huge new mechanical harvestors are beginning to be used in the woods here. They run a hydraulic device up a tree, shearing the limbs, then snip off the base, working around the clock, three shifts a day. Skinners pull the trunks out of the woods and devices called stackers can unload a truck of tree-length lumber in three minutes.

"I suppose you can have a lot of nostalgia," said Mr. Stedman. "But the good old days had some disadvantages. I guess I don't miss the old iceman."

The hard work of America's last log drive still left time for a woodsman to reflect on the passing of a way of life.

Lumberjacks Bested by Mechanic

Special to The New York Times

SCHAGHTICOKE, N.Y., Sept. 7—A 35-year-old diesel mechanic, equipped with an ax and a souped-up chain saw, became New York State's champion lumberjack here yesterday.

Richard Slingerland, who first entered competitive lumberjacking only four years ago, won over 24 contestants, some of them professional loggers, at the Rensselaer County Fair, just north of Troy.

"I don't know if I deserve it," he said, as he received the Governor's cup. He was still obviously distressed over his failure to place in the log-rolling event. But he had compensated for that blow by getting seconds in the individual chainsaw event and the bucksaw competition, and by finishing first, with a partner, Robert Bosco, in the two-man crosscut sawing event.

Mr. Slingerland and Reginald Hoyte, using peavies — lumberman's poker — rolled a huge tree trunk from one set of stakes in the ground to another set 40 feet away, then back again, in 21.8 seconds. The winning time was 18.7 seconds.

Mr. Slingerland came in behind Walter Becio of Burnt Albin in buck sawing and behind Wayne Marcellus of Wells in the chain-saw event. In both contests, the participants had to saw through white pine logs, eight inches in diameter, once with the buck saw and three times with the chain saw. Mr. Becio buck-sawed through the log in 12.3 seconds. Mr. Marcellus took 44 seconds to get through the same size log three times with the chain saw.

Mr. Hoyte won the most spectacular event—standing on a log eight inches in diameter and cutting through it with an ax by chopping v-shaped wedges between his feet. His time was 13.3 seconds.

Wealthy Families Fall Victim To Thief Who Arrives at Dinner

By GEORGE VECSEY
Special to The New York Times

WOODBURY, L.I.—Just as the etiquette books would recommend, the uninvited guest did not disturb the dozen dinner guests at a Long Island estate recently. Rather, he unobtrusively helped himself to whatever he could find in the bedroom, then slipped away into the thick woods, without a guest spilling a drop of soup in terror. This is how one commits a burglary in the better circles.

This same thief has committed as many as 12 similar burglaries in affluent North Shore communities since last spring. And his work is similar to the group of "dinner burglars" who have been climbing into suburban bedrooms at dinner hour in Westchester and Fairfield Counties for nearly a decade.

"We think the underlings stayed behind in Westchester and the main people are hitting Long Island," said Lieut. Andrew Anderson of the Bedford (N.Y.) Police Department.

Most of the Nassau burglaries came from April through July, prompting Westchester detectives to speculate the gang may have moved into New England during the hottest weather. The gang will then move southward, following the robins and the diamond necklaces, renting homes in fancy sections of Florida for their next feats of gall and agility.

"It takes a lot of nerve to go into There were two or three such burglaries in Greenwich, Conn., last week,

April 16—Gerald DeSimone, Old Westbury, $500.

Ford Motor's new cars will be essentially the same size and weight as last year's models. The decision not to scale down the 1977 models was made because Ford officials felt there was still a market for big cars. Ford expects to profit from the decision by General Motors to make its 1977 line smaller. [53:6.]

Jacob Markowitz, 72, a Justice Of New York Supreme Court, Dies

By ROBERT HANLEY

Justice Jacob Markowitz, a judge on the State Supreme Court here since 1954, died Monday night at the Memorial Hospital for Cancer & Allied Diseases after a long illness. He was 72 years old.

In his 22-year career as a jurist, Mr. Markowitz molded a reputation as a hard-working judge who avoided histronics both on the bench and in his written opinions. A soft-spoken and gentle man, Justice Markowitz's opinions sometimes approached lyricism.

For instance, in 1967 he seemed saddened in ordering the destruction of the last ice house in Manhattan as an unprofitable "victim of an illusive progress—practical and unsentimental."

He wrote: "The ice wagon, the hitching of horses, the ice man hauling ice, his hawking cries reverberating from tenement to tenement, his unsung virtues, his mythical escapades are now history, part of the soul of yesteryear."

Blunt, and Also Liberal

Yet, his rulings could be forthright, even blunt. In 1960, in upholding the constitutionality of the state's former Condon-Wadlin Act, which provided for dismissal of any teacher or other public employee who struck, Justice Markowitz said: "They [the teachers] may work for the school system upon the reasonable terms laid down by the proper authorities in New York. If they do not choose to work on such terms, they are at liberty . . . to go elsewhere."

In his other notable rulings, however, Judge Markowitz seemed more liberal.

During the 1960's, he struck down the exclusionary father-son hiring practices of a metal workers' union here and ordered its apprentice program opened to blacks, who previously had been barred. He also scolded Hunter College for being exclusionary in renting its lecture halls for poitical forums, and instructed the college to lift its ban against a lecture sponsored by The National Review, William F. Buckley Jr.'s conservative periodical.

His rulings in tenant-landlord cases seemed to favor the tenant. In 1962, he threw out several suits by real estate operators testing the constitutionality of the rent control law here. And two years ago, in a ruling State Attorney General Louis J. Lefkowitz hailed as a "landmark decision," the judge ordered landlords to pay tenants interest on apartment security deposits held before Sept. 1, 1970.

Lived on Lower East Side

Justice Markowitz was born in Russia on May 1, 1904. As a youth, he came to the Lower East Side with his parents, and soon began a life-long affiliation with the Henry Street Settlement. At his death he was a board member of the settlement.

In 1939, after graduation from New York University Law School, Justice Markowitz began several years of duty on the law committee of Tammany Hall. He had risen to chairman of the committee when he was elected to the State Supreme Court, First Judicial District, (Manhattan and the Bronx), in 1953.

He retained that post until he was appointed presiding judge of the first district's Appellate Term, which handles appeals from the city's civil and criminal courts, in the late 1960's.

He is survived by his wife, the former Pearl Rosenfeld, of New York.

Services are planned at the Riverside Memorial Chapel, 76th Street and Amsterdam Avenue, at noon tomorrow.

Lester S. LaPierre, 85; Architect Had Designed Large Country Homes

Lester S. LaPierre, a retired architect, died Sunday at his home in Sea Cliff, L.I. He was 85 years old.

Mr. LaPierre retired in 1964 as a senior partner of LaPierre, Litchfield and Partnes, now known as Litchfield Grosfeld Associates.

A graduate of the Columbia University School of Architecture, Mr. LaPierre designed large private country residences and a number of public buildings.

Among his clients were the Heinz and Scaife families, for whom he designed large homes outside Pittsburgh, and the Armours of Chicago.

During World War II he was active on defense projects, among them the United States Merchant Marine Academy at Kings Point, L.I.

More recent projects included the B. Altman store at Manhasset, L.I., Veterans Administration hospitals in New York City and Pittsburgh, the Thule Air Force Base in Greenland and the Union Central Medical Center in Ragoon, Burma.

He leaves his wife, the former Joan Straat, a son, Douglas B. a retired Navy captain, and two grandchildren.

JOHN J. CLARK

John J. Clark, executive vice president and secretary of Boyd, Weir & Sewell, Inc., steamship brokers, died Sunday in his home in Short Hills, N. J., after a short illness. He was 68 years old.

Mr. Clark who had started with the steamship company in 1924, was a member of the Downtown Athletic, Whitehall, Foreign Commerce, and Traffic Clubs, and the Australian-New Zealand Society, all of New York.

He is survived by his wife, the former Anna Easkold; two sons, John Jr., and William P.; a daughter, Mrs. John Delaney; a sister and 10 grandchildren.

William J. Foote, Retired Editor Of Hartford Courant, Dead at 71

WEST HARTFORD, Conn. Sept. 7 (AP)—William J. Foote, former managing editor and editorial page editor of The Hartford Courant, died of cancer yesterday. He was 71 years old.

Mr. Foote joined The Courant in 1930 as a reporter after brief stints with The New York Herald Tribune and Fortune magazine.

Many of the columns of Mr. Foote, a New Haven native and a graduate of Yale University, described the sea and nature. He had sailed often on Long Island Sound.

He was a Pulitzer Prize juror and a trustee of the Wadsworth Atheneum and Hillyer College, the forerunner of the University of Hartford.

Mr. Foote was a director of Child and Family Services of Connecticut and was a leader in the successful effort to reform the state's child-welfare laws.

He is survived by his wife, the former Dorothy Bennett; three sons, and a sister and five grandchildren.

JOSEPH C. BERKWIT SR.

Joseph C. Berkwit Sr., who retired three years ago as a maritime executive, died yesterday in New York Hospital after a short illness. Mr. Berkwit, who had residences at 799 Park Avenue and in Hollywood, Fla., was 79 years old.

In 1922 he founded his own company, J. C. Berkwit & Company, which specialized in the purchase and sale of marine and other equipment. It included the dredge Las Cruces used in digging the Panama Canal.

Mr. Berkwit, is survived by his wife, the former Zena Krumnas; a son, Joseph Jr., a daughter, Ann Marie Lewis; two grandchildren; a brother, Elliot, and a sister, Cecelia Miller.

CHARLES M'HARRY, 62, COLUMNIST FOR NEWS

Wrote 'On the Town' for 15 Years —Joined Newspaper in '36

Charles McHarry, a columnist for the New York Daily News, died yesterday at New York Hospital. He was 62 years old and lived in Peter Cooper Village.

For more than 15 years Mr. McHarry wrote the "On the Town" column, offering news items about show business personalities and comments, usually in a humorous vein, on problems such as his disputes over having appliances repaired.

Charles Kirwan McHarry was born in Sesser, Ill. He attended Butler University and graduated from Hanover College in Hanover, Ind., while working for newspapers in Indianapolis and Louisville, Ky. as a correspondent.

In August 1936 he joined The News, where he worked for his entire career in a variety of assignments ranging from the police beat to rewrite duty.

During World War II Mr. McHarry served in the Army, where he was a copy editor for Stars and Stripes. After his discharge in 1946 he returned to The News as a rewrite man.

In 1960 he was promoted from drama writer to columnist, succeeding the late Danton Walker, whose "Broadway" column was renamed and reassigned. The column first appeared five days a week, was later reduced to three times a week and in the last year and a half became a Saturday feature.

Mr. McHarry is survived by his wife, Elizabeth Poston; a son Mark, and a daughter, Laney. Also surviving is his mother, Mrs. P. K. McHarry of Mena, Ark.

CAPT. ROBERT E. BAKER

Special to The New York Times

NEWPORT, R.I., Sept. 7—Capt. Robert E. Baker, 75 years old, of this city, a retired naval surgeon who served for 30 years in the Navy before retirement, died Sunday at the Naval Regional Medical Center here after a long illness.

Born in Mechanicsburg, Ohio, the son of the late Dr. Lyman and Ada Tailer Baker, he was a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania and a member of various medical and Masonic orders.

In World War II he served as commandant of the naval hospital at Panama and later commanded the hospital ship Constellation in the Korean War. He later was chief of surgery at the Newport Naval Hospital prior to his retirement in 1954.

THEODORE L. HOLDEN

HARTFORD, Sept. 7 (AP)—Theodore L. Holden, an editor of The Hartford Times for 46 years, died Sunday in Portland, Me. Mr. Holden, a native of Lynn, Mass., retired in 1969 as the newspaper's state editor and literary editor.

He was president of the Glastonbury Chamber of Commerce and vice president of the Connecticut Merit System Association. He also served on the Glastonbury Republican Town Committee and was instrumental in developing the Connecticut Opera Association.

He is survived by two sons, a daughter, a brother, three sisters and eight grandchildren.

Moose Keeps Doctor Up Tree for a Night

BIG SKY, Mont., Sept. 7 (UPI)—A Detroit, Mich., doctor visiting the Big Sky resort over the weekend spent the night in a tree, trapped there by a moose.

Dr. Bruce Hall, his wife and two friends were hiking on Lone Mountain Saturday afternoon when he went down to a stream for a drink of water, heard some noises and decided to investigate the source of the sounds from a pine tree.

Repeated efforts to get down from the tree were met with more rustling and crashing, Dr. Hall said. When the sun went down and the temperature dropped into the 30's, he stuffed pine needles in his shirt to keep out the cold.

The barking of a trained dog named Baron, owned by a county sheriff's deputy searching for Dr. Hall, was apparently responsible for scaring the moose away, leaving Dr. Hall free to climb down from the tree after almost 24 hours.

Dr. William Sweeney, 55; Medical Research Chief At Lederle Laboratories

Dr. William M. Sweeney of Montvale, N. J., director of medical research at the Lederle Laboratories Division of American Cyanamid Company, Pearl River, N. Y., died Monday in Valley Hospital in Ridgewood, N. J., after a long illness. His age was 55.

Dr. Sweeney was responsible for the development of many drugs. They included Achromycin V, an antibiotic; Amicar, used for the treatment of excessive bleeding, and Minocin, used for the treatment of infections caused by a number of microorganisms.

He also established the radioisotope laboratory at the Bergen Pines Hospital in Paramus, N. J.

The research director, who served as a captain in the Army Medical Corps in Korea in 1955, was Mayor of Montvale from 1968 to 1972.

A native of Ashley, Pa., he received his bachelor of science degree at the University of Notre Dame in 1943 and his medical degree at the University of St. Louis in 1947.

He had a Neilson fellowship in biochemistry at the St. Louis university in 1950 and 1951 and was an instructor of internal medicine at the university medical school from 1951 to 1953. Dr. Sweeney was also a graduate of the Columbia University Graduate School for Business Administration.

MILTON W. WILLENSON, 60, FOUNDED A PHOTO SCHOOL

Dr. Milton W. Willenson, owner of the Germain School of Photography, died Sept. 1 at his office in Manhattan following a heart attack. He was 60 years old.

The school was founded in 1947 by Dr. Willenson and his father-in-law Morris Germain, an award-winning photographer and teacher. In 1973 Dr. Willenson opened a branch of the school in Jamaica, West Indies.

Dr. Willenson was born in New York City and attended the City College of New York, where he earned his B.A. degree in 1935. He received a law degree from New York University in 1938.

He later returned to New York University, where he earned a master's degree and a doctorate, both in the field of education.

He was a past president of the New York chapter of the National Rehabilitation Association.

Dr. Willenson is survived by his wife, Elaine Kaye Willenson, and three children, Scott Robert, Seth Matthew and Elizabeth Rachel.

HARVEY H. OLSON

WETHERSFIELD, Conn., Sept. 7 (AP)—Harvey H. Olson, a long-time Hartford-area broadcaster and news official, died at home yesterday. He was 64 years old.

For more than 25 years, Mr. Olson was an announcer, then program manager and vice president at the WDRC radio station in Hartford. He turned to television in 1960, becoming news director and program manager for WHNB-TV.

In 1966, he became executive director of the Connecticut Association of Boards of Education, and several years later was appointed publications supervisor for the Connecticut Education Association.

Mr. Olson, who was born in New York City, was active in the theater, and his work for charity included the Easter Seal movement, tuberculosis societies and blindness prevention campaign.

He is survived by his wife, three sons, his father and five grandchildren.

M. TROY JONES

M. Troy Jones, who retired last year as chief executive officer of Northern Oil Company of Paoli, Pa., died Friday in his home in Paoli after a short illness. He was 68 years old.

Fishermen at the mouth of the Salmon River, where it flows into Lake Ontario at Pulaski, N.Y., angling Sunday for salmon

Fishermen Ignoring Perils Of Infected Upstate Salmon

By RICHARD SEVERO
Special to The New York Times

PULASKI, N.Y.—Thousands of salmon —many of them believed to be seriously contaminated by Mirex, PCB's and other toxic chemical compounds —have begun to leave Lake Ontario to begin their annual spawning run in the rivers and streams that flow into the lake.

But here on the Salmon River, just a few miles from the lake, the fishermen who stalk the salmon and who try to impale the fish on huge hooks in a sport called "snatching" or "snagging" do not seem terribly concerned.

For them, the sport's the thing and many say they will eat the salmon, even though in some instances the fish may contain chemical levels that exceed several Federal guidelines.

"First we had mercury, then it was PCB's, now it's Mirex, and who knows what's next?" said Bob Larison, owner of the busy Silver Saddles Sports Shop in this Oswego County community.

"We eat salmon four times a week," said John Phelps, a guide, "and we probably put 700 pounds in the freezer every year. Everybody in the family eats them and there has been no problem at all."

The substances in question, which also include Kepone and DDT, tend not to be acutely toxic, at least not when consumed in the levels at which they appear to be present in Lake Ontario fish.

They have caused cancer in experiments with laboratory animals but there are questions as to what they do to humans who ingest them over a period of many years. It is known that the substances tend to store themselves in the fatty tissue of humans and wildlife.

Agency Warned

In a recent investigation into the nature of the contamination of Lake Ontario and the reasons for it, The New York Times learned that the State Department of Environmental Conservation has been stocking Lake Ontario and Lake Erie with millions of salmon.

The department also plans to construct a $10 million hatchery for trout and salmon near the lake, although it has been warned that any fish put into the lake might well be contaminated by it. But plans for both the stocking program and the hatchery remain unchanged.

"We don't have the data we need as yet on salmon," said Dr. Ted Hullar, a departmental deputy commissioner, in a recent interview. He also said that the department had assumed that even if the contamination did not disappear with time, the fish from the new hatchery could be used someplace else.

No formal alert about the Mirex situation has been issued to the fishermen by the department.

The agency's public relations office issued a press release last Aug. 10 that noted some changes in fishing regulations on Lake Ontario "to improve the fishing opportunity for anglers-seeking ... salmon ... as they begin their spawning runs."

The release did not mention Mirex, although for the last year, the department has received many warnings about contamination, from United States and Canadian researchers as well as from its own scientists, most notably Dr. Ward Stone, an associate wildlife pathologist.

Snagging Criticized

Basically, the critics are saying that even if the salmon are not eaten by those who catch them, the poisons they contain may be spread. The chemicals in question are very persistent in the environment and could reappear in the lake, in the earth, or in an animal that eats the salmon.

There is also criticism of another kind—criticism of snagging.

"I find snagging repulsive and those who do it unsportsmanlike," said Jim Sheedy, chairman of the Fish Committee of the New York State Conservation Council, an organization that claims a membership of 350,000, most of them fishermen and hunters.

State regulations allow the fishermen to use triple hooks, each two inches long and weighted with lead, with as many as five treble hooks on a single line. When a fisherman sees a salmon hover*ing in a pool, he casts, trying to hook* any part of it.

"It really doesn't matter," one of them said. "The fish are spawning. They're going to die anyhow."

John N. Hoeko, president of Catskill Waters, an influential group of trout fishermen who pride themselves on their lures, saw the fishing ritual last weekend and said, "It's barbaric. Why not dynamite them or hit them on the head with a rock?"

Mr. Sheedy said that some fishermen waited in the river in the dark to club the fish with cut-off oars. Other fishermen have attached their treble hooks to cables and used them on the fish like a cat-o'-nine-tails, he said.

"It's like a fever," said Mr. Phelps. "I've seen grown men fight over whose hooks actually got the fish."

brought him into conflict with Governor Carey, who favored balancing economic and environmental concerns. Mr. Reid had other problems with Governor Carey, but this was considered the major one.

Before his resignation, Mr. Reid warned the public not to eat the fish from the Hudson and then closed the river to most types of commercial fishing.

PCB's have caused cancer in laboratory animals and a variety of illnesses among General Electric workers who have been in contact with the substance for a long period of time. The toxic chemical was discovered recently in the milk of more than 30 women living in Michigan. In Japan, more than 1,000 people became ill from PCB's that had leaked into rice oil used for cooking.

The Hudson River is believed to contain about 500,000 pounds of the chemical, which binds itself to particulate matter suspended in the water as well as to the sediment on the bottom of rivers, lakes and estuaries.

For about 45 years, PCB's were used in lubricants, paper coatings, hydraulic fluids, plasticizers, paints, inks and adhesives. Because of their inertness, fire resistance and ability to hold an electrical charge, they were regarded as well-suited to the manufacture of capacitors and generators.

Decline in Output Stressed

General Electric has been dumping PCB's into the Hudson for more than 25 years. Between 1966 and 1972 alone, the company discharged an estimated 84,000 pounds of it. The company says, however, that it has reduced its output in recent months, from about two pounds a day last December to a few ounces daily now.

Congress is moving toward legislating a ban on PCB production, but conflict exists over the best way to eliminate the substance that has already been deposited.

"We don't really know if dredging is good," said Dr. Karim Ahmed, a biochemist with the Natural Resources Defense Council "We need to do some pilot studies of how to get rid ofitand where t ogo with it nce it isout.Part of the agreement is to study the problem first."

Fishing Banned in Georgia River

ATLANTA, Sept. 7 (UPI)—The Georgia Board of Natural Resources today ordered an end of commercial fishing on the Coosa River because of PCB poisoning and urged sportsmen to throw back fish they catch on the river. The emergency 120-day ban was imposed from Rome to the Alabama line after laboratory tests of fish caught in the Coosa showed levels of PCB's up to 25 times the safe content.

The Commission of Natural Resources, Joe Tanner, said the pollutant was spilled over a 20-year period from a General Electric plant at Rome, where electrical transformers are manufactured. He said that since 1970, G.E. has been working to prevent PCB drainage from the plant.

Suffolk Accuses Chief of Aviation In Landing Case

By ARI L. GOLDMAN
Special to The New York Times

RIVERHEAD, L.I., Sept. 7—The Suffolk County Commissioner of Aviation was indicted today for turning off the instrument landing system at Suffolk Airport as a plane was approaching in a thick fog. The action was reportedly taken to keep a principal in a hotel purchase, who was in the plane, from consummating the deal.

The Commissioner, Col. Robert L. Rosasco, pleaded not guilty to a charge of reckless endangerment before Judge Frank L. Gates of County Court. As he left the courtroom, Colonel Rosasco's lawyer said the 48-year-old former Air Force officer would have no comment.

District Attorney Henry F. O'Brien, who announced the indictment, would not comment on the circumstances surrounding the alleged act. But, sources close to the case told a tale of two partners who decided to purchase a Westhampton beach club, a falling out between them, an attempt by one of them to purchase the property and the wait for a court order as a six-seated Piper Twin Aztec approached the airport on a foggy, rainy afternoon.

The story begins in early 1975 when two business partners, Clifford Sigmeister and Leonard M. Tuttman, decided to purchase the Dune Deck Hotel in Westhampton for about $500,000. They entered into a deal with the executors of the estate of the late Hyland Chessler, who owned the 11-acre beach resort for more than 20 years, that they would operate the hotel for the summer of 1975 with intent to purchase it after the season.

Call to Official Reported

The two partners apparently had a falling out during the summer, and, on Aug. 4, one of them, Mr. Tuttman, arranged a meeting with Morris Chessler, a co-executor of the estate, at the offices of a Westhampton lawyer. Associates of Mr. Sigmeister found out that Mr. Chessler was on his way to Suffolk Airport in Westhampton to close the deal.

In an effort to stop the purchase, a lawyer for Mr. Sigmeister went to the chambers of Judge Gordon M. Lipetz of State Supreme Court in Southampton to ask for a restraining order.

When the attorney did not return by 4 P.M., one of Mr. Sigmeister's associates reportedly called Colonel Rosasco at his home in Westhampton Beach and asked the Commissioner to delay the plane.

According to these sources, shortly before 5 P.M. Colonel Rosasco drove to the airport and went directly to the shack that controls the instrument landing system, which emits a radio beam to guide the pilot through a fog. When he got there, the plane was hooked into this system, traveling about 110 miles an hour, and was about 40 seconds from the runway. Colonel Rosasco allegedly ordered the system shut down.

The aircraft climbed back into its holding pattern, and landed about 10 minutes later when the automatic system was turned back on.

Mr. Chessler was late for his business appointment. By the time he arrived, so had an order from Judge Lipetz prohibiting the sale.

COLLUSION CHARGED IN FEEDING PROGRAM

Miss Holtzman Questions Contracts Between Sponsor and Affiliates in the Summer Lunch Plan

By RICHARD J. MEISLIN

Representative Elizabeth Holtzman, Democrat of Brooklyn, said yesterday that affiliates of a major association of New York City summer food sponsors were operating $7.6 million worth of programs in four other cities, and charged that their contracts in those cities indicated collusion with two New York City caterers.

Government sources said yesterday that investigators for the Agriculture Department, which financed the Summer Food Service Program, had "for several weeks" been scrutinizing the relationships nationwide between affiliates of B'nai Torah Institute, the largest food sponsor in New York City, and its caterers.

The non-profit, tax-exempt organization, headed by Rabbi Lieb Pinter, has operations in Chicago, Philadelphia, New Jersey and St. Louis in addition to its five sponsorships in New York City, Miss Holtzman said. It has contracts for food with Meals and Snacks in Philadelphia and with Hi-Score Foods or affiliated companies in the other three cities. Both firms also cater parts of B'nai Torah's New York City operation.

"The Pinter group seems to have set up a network of sponsors and favored vendors," Miss Holtzman said in a news conference. "The relationship is obviously a close one [and] extracts the maximum price from the U.S. Government and thus its taxpayers."

The Summer Food Service Program is designed to feed needy children as a counterpart to the school lunch program. Administered by the State Education Department here with Agriculture Department funds, the 10-week program, which ended last week, is expected to cost $80 million in New York City and $150 million nationwide.

Wrongdoing Is Denied

Victor Mayer, executive director of B'nai Torah, denied any wrongdoing and said his organization had "no connection with [the vendors] other than that they serve us lunches."

Mr. Mayer acknowledged that Special Programs for Americans, a B'nai Torah affiliate, operated food programs in Chicago, Philadelphia and New Jersey. He also confirmed that executives of B'nai Torah interceded of behalf of the St. Louis organization, but said that organization was not affiliated with B'nai Torah.

Miss Holtzman said that in two cities—St. Louis and Chicago—the vendor selected was the only one who bid on the Pinter organization's contract, and the Pinter organizations were the only ones who received only one bid.

Records of bid acceptances and rejections were not available for Philadelphia, she said.

She said that all four Pinter organization contracts were signed at the maximum rate allowed by law, unlike any other food-program contract in St. Louis and unlike the majority of contracts in the other three cities.

"The coincidences are too coincidental," Miss Holtzman said.

Comments on Bidding

The Representative said she believed the lack of bids on the Pinter organization's contracts was caused by an unusual provision in the bidding offer, requiring caterers to provide an interest-free loan to the sponsor for an indeterminate time as a condition of the bid.

"It seems to me," Miss Holtzman said, "that this was inserted to discourage businessmen who had a legitimate bidding interest from bidding on the contracts."

In New Jersey, the interest-free loan requirement was rejected by state administrators, and the Pinter operation there received bids from two caterers at bids below Food Distributors of America, a Hi-Score organization. But it rejected the lower bids and contracted with Food Distributors instead, Miss Holtzman said.

Mr. Mayer said he could give no im*mediate explanation of his organization's* contract procedure in New Jersey.

George Ribowsky, the apparent head of the Hi-Score organization, could not be reached for comment yesterday.

In New York City, Miss Holtzman said, the vendors who served the Pinter organization this year appear to be the same as those who served the B'nai Torah program in 1975, with one of last year's caterers—Luigi Golstein Inc.—replaced by two apparently related vendors, Jabco Food Services and Food Service Dynamics.

Amnesia victim at St. Clare's hospital

Woman's Identity Sought

An elderly well-dressed woman who was found wandering the New York City's streets two weeks ago by the police is at St. Clare's Hospital, trying to remember her name and where she came from, according to the police.

When found lying in front of a Chock Full o'Nuts restaurant at 39th Street and Broadway in midafternoon on Aug. 26, the police said, she was suffering from malnutrition and incoherent. She was wearing a white and beige shortsleeved print dress, high-heeled black shoes and carrying a black leather handbag, according to Detective Edward F. Gannon of the Missing Persons Squad. Detective Gannon said that the woman is 60 to 70 years old, weighs about 130 pounds, is 5 feet 3 inches tall, with a light complexion, straight gray hair and blue-gray eyes. The police have asked anyone with information to call 374-6913.

School Strike Threat

The Jersey City Board of Education and the Jersey City Education Association continued intensive bargaining in an effort to avert a strike today against the city's public schools. A third of the 2,000 teachers began picketing, joining clerks and nonprofessional members of the union who struck earlier in the day.

Horton Is Released From Upstate Jail

After a week's stay in the Genesee County jail for drunken driving and speeding, Representative Frank Horton was released and his driving license restored on condition that he attend a driving-rehabilitation school. The 56-year-old Republican was let out four days early for good behavior.

The Congressman had to pay a $200 fine. The fine and jail sentence were imposed last Tuesday by Town Justice Frederick Muskopf of Stafford. Mr. Horton, who has served 14 years in the House, said in Rochester that he had rejected his lawyer's advice to fight the charges. He said that serving the sentence had cleared his conscience.

New York State's Lottery, Is Started Prematurely; One Dealer Loses Permit

The sale of tickets to New York State's first instant lottery, officially scheduled to get under way today, had an embarrassingly premature, albeit successful start yesterday as several dealers in the city and upstate sold thousands of the $1 tickets.

At least one unnamed dealer had his license to sell the tickets suspended after he failed to heed a warning to hold off selling them until today, according to John Quinn, director of the lottery.

But any winners of the prematurely sold tickets, which offer prizes ranging from $2 to $1,000 a week for life, will be paid, Mr. Quinn said.

Harvey Kedansky, who runs a newsstand aross from Macy's, said he had sold nearly 500 tickets in two hours.

Many of the prematurely sold tickets had been picked up by vendors from a branch of the Chemical Bank, which sent out employees later in the day to try to halt the sales, but not, in some cases, until the vendors had sold all their tickets.

Susan Weeks, speaking for the bank, said that the branch had sold the tickets to the vendors when it opened at 8 A.M. and had not told the wholesale buyers that they could not sell them until today.

Giants Laughing Again; End of Cuts Quells Fear

By MICHAEL KATZ

Special to The New York Times

PLEASANTVILLE, N. Y., Sept. 7—There was laughter again today in the Giants' locker room.

The final cuts had been made, the two newest Giants—a wrestler of Polish descent from Passaic, N. J., and a landscaper of Italian descent who grew up playing soccer in Spokane, Wash.—were installed in their new cubicles, and the other 41 players resumed talking about the Washington Redskins and opening game, just five days away.

While yesterday nervous players had gathered and waited for the Giants to get down to the National Football League player limit, now spirited young men were joking about the survival of the fittest. And where yesterday Craig Brantley and Bob Hyland had dressed, now Ron Mikolajczyk and Joe Danelo were holding news conferences.

Obtained From the Raiders

Yesterday, the sign on the cubicle read, "80-Brantley," but the wide receiver has been released and now the sign reads, "62-Mik- - - -." Mikolajczyk, an offensive lineman who is as wide as his name and who has wrestled in the offseason for the last four years, was obtained yesterday from the Oakland Raiders for a draft choice. Mik—"everybody calls me Mik, I guess"—had come home.

He grew up in Passaic, played on the same high school team as did Jim Tatum of the Raiders, and then passed through the University of Tampa; Toronto in the Canadian Football League (two years) and Memphis in the World Football League (two years). The 6-foot-3-inch, 275-pound player was used mostly at guard by Oakland ("I'm a tackle") and had asked to be traded to the Giants, who had him working out today at guard.

But the man who lost a 45-minute match to Jerry Lawler for the Southern heavyweight wrestling championship of the world before training camp began will be given an opportunity later at tackle. Mike Gibbons, one of the former Memphis players who had to sweat out yesterday's cuts, had played tackle behind Mik at Memphis and called him "one of the best I've ever seen."

Across the less-crowded room, Danelo was occupying Hyland's old locker and saying how nice it was to have a locker anywhere. "I didn't know if I was going to have to find another job outside football," said the place-kicker, who was traded to the Giants yesterday by the Green Bay Packers for another draft choice. "I've been doing landscaping for a fellow around Spokane for the last eight years. I guess that's what I probably would've done."

But Danelo, who had Chester Marcol, one of the league's best, to compete with at Green Bay, will help the Giants kick off their 52d N.F.L. season at Washington. He'll do it soccer-style, and not only because he was a soccer player as well as a place-kicker in high school and at Washington State.

Jack Gregory, the defensive end, left camp to be at the bedside of his 3-year-old son, who is undergoing another tracheal operation Thursday morning. Gregory will miss the "defensive day" of the preparation for the Redskins, but will open at right end in any case at Washington. . . . The Redskins have listed Billy Kilmer, their regular quarterback, as "questionable" for the opener because of bruised ribs. Joe Theismann is the replacement.

Keysone Pioneer Wins Trot at Meadowlands

Special to The New York Times

EAST RUTHERFORD, N. J., Sept. 7—Keystone Pioneer, driven by Bill Haughton, won the $50,000 Hiram Woodruff free-for-all trot tonight at The eMadowlands, but another entrant stood in the spotlight following the race.

Meadow Bright, who finished fourth for Del Miller, was officially retired after the race and will be shipped tomorrow to Hanover Shoe Farm in Hanover, Pa., to await her first foal. Meadow Bright is expected to foal in April.

Keystone Pioneer, a 3-year-old filly, was impressive in winning the Woodruff. She overcame an early break to score a 1:59 2/5 triumph, her fastest in seven victories this year. She paid $5.40 for $2 to win. Dream of Glory finished second with Pride of Carlisle third.

Douglas, No. 1 Choice, Ready To Sign Pistons' Pact Today

The Detroit Pistons have called a news conference for today to announce the signing of Leon Douglas, their No. 1 draft choice. The 6-foot-9½-inch 230-pound Douglas was given a reported four-year, no-cut $500,000 contract. Douglas averaged 21 points and almost 13 rebounds a game last season for the University of Alabama. The Pistons, who have several unsigned players, are still negotiating with Marvin Barnes, their first choice in the American Basketball Association dispersal draft. Barnes has expressed displeasure with the Spirit of St. Louis' contract the Pistons have inherited. He wants more of his money up front.

With the signing of Douglas, and the addition of Barnes, to go with Bob Lanier, Curtis Rowe, George Trapp, Howard Porter and M. L. Carr, the Pistons are overstocked with frontcourt men. It appears certain Detroit will try to use its excess talent to trade for a gib guard. Rowe, who is not signed and would be in his option season, has been mentioned often as trade bait. The Knicks have expressed interest in acquiring Rowe. They are trying to find a guard acceptable to the Pistons to work out a possible three-team trade.

The barrel end of the bat tore a jagged hole a half inch deep in Yaeger's neck. Dr. H. Paul Bauer Jr., the Padres' team doctor, had to cut a four-inch lateral incision in Yeager's neck. "It was sickening," said Steve Garvey, the Dodgers' first baseman. Archibroda telling of his agreement yesterday to rejoin the Colts

Archibroda Returns, Vacated, to the Colts

By WILLIAM N. WALLACE

Archibroda was rehired as ch yesterday by the Balti- ts, thus concluding as bi- episode as one can imagine a coach, a general manager m owner. The quiet, mod- ear-old Marchibroda, voted nal Football League's coach ear last season, had quit ce last Thursday night in Mich., and again on Sunday he owner's yacht, which to be in Milwaukee. His signation was accepted the ne.

ner, Robert (Tiger) Irsay of , and the general manager, nas, wooed Marchibroda two key assistants, Whitey ho runs the offense, and ghan, director of defense, to quit, too, and the nsidered, but rejected, boy- actice in support of their ts, favored to qualify for fs again this season, open ign on Sunday against the nd Patriots.

hibroda Takes a Stand

roda despaired of his job gly scene involving Irsay se of what the coach re- interference by Thomas. victories, the Colts lost four preseason games, the coming against the Detroit ontiac on Thursday. Irsay, ht the team for a record in 1972, stormed into the m (not for the first time) d the players.

he turned his anger on unz, the all-pro offensive rchibroad could stand no told he owner to find a . "I can't have locker-room e this every week," said da.

es, the star quarterback, don't know if Irsay was speaking or letting whisky have a chance."

The exhibition defeats meant little to the players. "The man didn't realize what we were trying to accomplish," said Lydell Mitchell, the star running back. "We hadn't put in half our offense. We were saving our razzle dazzle for when it counted."

Irsay, who made his money in commercial air conditioning and heating, returned to Chicago and boarded his yacht, appropriately named "Mighty I," for a cruise. Thomas arranged for a meeting aboard the yacht in Milwaukee on Sunday, one that lasted 4½ hours. The issue was between coach and general manager as to who had the power to hire and dismiss players. Thomas had it, and also the backing of Irsay.

Since the end of last year, after the Colts had turned a 2-12 won-lost record of 1974 into a 10-4 season, Thomas had let go of five seasoned players, including Mike Curtis, a former all-pro linebacker, and Marty Domres, the backup quarterback, whom Marchibroda wanted to keep to steady his young team.

Strong Statement by Jones

There was more talk on Monday and Thomas apparently compromised about the power of player selection yesterday to get his coach back. He may have been moved by the statement Jones issued Monday on behalf of the players. It said Irsay and Thomas "have completely destroyed the team by forcing Ted out the week of the first league game."

Jones had also said Marchibroda should not "have to endure the personal abuse that I have seen Irsay and Thomas give him."

After the rehiring, Marchibroda said he would have "full control of football matters." Irsay, talking from his office in Skokie, said, "Ted can hire and fire players and coaches. Everything is ironed out." And Thomas said, "Mr. Irsay owns the club. An owner is allowed to do whatever he wants. If he wants to be on the side-

Yanks Beat Red Sox, Tiant, 4-2

By JOSEPH DURSO

The Boston Red Sox made their final Yankee Stadium appearance of the year last night, and not even old Luis Tiant could reverse the fortunes of baseball war that one summer had brought.

The Yankees, riding high with only 27 games in the regular season after last night, rattled Tiant for two runs in the first inning and two more in the fourth, then stifled the Boston bats and scored a 4-2 victory.

This was the 11th time in their last 15 games that the Yankees had won, and the 10th time in 15 games against the Red Sox, guaranteeing the Yanks the "season's series" with Boston for the first time in five years. The two teams play each other 18 games a season.

If there was any doubt that the magic had deserted the Red Sox, the doubt was dispelled in the eighth inning, when they loaded the bases with nobody out. That was when Dick Tidrow relieved Dock Ellis for the Yankees and threw two pitches that yielded three outs, and the Red Sox rustled no more.

For most people, part of the charm of the Red Sox last year was the sight of the portly, cigar-smoking Cuban pitcher with the spinning motion and the tantalizing stretch on the mound. But, as the memory of Boston's rousing World Series effort against the Cincinnati Reds faded this year, so did most of the charm. They even began to badger old "Loo-ie" about his age, which is 35.

"What difference does it make how old a man is if he does his job?" Tiant said. "I do my job. I don't want to leave Boston, but I will if I have to—and I'll pitch someplace else."

The Yankees' relations with Tiant go back to 1964, the last year they won the pennant. He was a rookie with the Cleveland Indians after six seasons in the minor leagues, including three with the Mexico City Tigers. In his debut in Yankee Stadium, he outpitched Whitey Ford, 3-0, and through the years went on to complete a record of 21 victories and 10 defeats against the Yankees. No pitcher in the American League has beaten them more often.

Yanks Take Quick Lead

The high point in their relations, from Tiant's point of view, arrived two years ago, when he won five of six decisions against the Yankees. The low spot arrived this summer, when the Yankees began to rise again and included Tiant among their victims: one victory, one defeat before last night's meeting.

For Tiant, the low spot got even lower in the first inning last night, when Roy White walked and Thurman Munson beat out a bunt to the left side of the mound. Then Chris Chambliss whacked a slicing shot that bounced to the 430-foot sign in left-center for a triple and a 2-0 lead. That also gave Chambliss 89 runs batted in, tying him for the Yankee leadership in production with Munson.

In the fourth, Tiant's relations with the Yankees deteriorated even further. With one down, Graig Nettles singled to right field, and then Oscar Gamble unloaded a skyrocket off the balcony above right field, at the third deck high above the marker reading "363 feet." It was his 15th home run since the Yankees pried him from the Cleveland Indians last winter for Pat Dobson, and now old Luis Tiant was four runs short.

While all this was going on, the Red

Orantes, Borg, Miss Evert Reach Open Quarterfinals

By FARTON KEESE

The defending men's and women's singles champions made successful appearances yesterday, while the five-set marathon match returned in thrilling fashion at the United States Open tennis championships in Forest Hills, Queens.

Manual Orantes of Spain, who defeated Jimmy Connors in last year's final, needed all five sets to turn back Stan Smith, 3-6, 1-6, 6-2, 7-6, 6-1, while Chris Evert continued to blitz her opponents as she routed Sue Barker of Britain, 6-1, 6-0.

Orantes and Miss Evert moved into the quarterfinals. The Spanish champion was joined by Bjorn Borg, who out-lasted Brian Gottfried, 6-7, 3-6, 6-4, 6-4, 6-2, in the most exciting match of the day, and Dick Stockton, who had little trouble with Jairo Velasco of Colombia, winning, 6-3, 7-5, 6-4.

Other women advancing to the round of eight included Mima Jausovec of Yugoslavia, Rosemary Casals, Dianne Fromholtz, Virginia Ruzici of Rumania and 16-year-old Zenda Liess of Daytona Beach, Fla., who put out Wendy Overton.

The triumphs by last year's champions helped dispel somewhat the tales surrounding injured parts of their anatomy, namely Miss Evert's hand and Orantes's left arm.

Smith's Elbow Problem

"My hand feels fine," said Miss Evert last night after taking her 98th consecutive contest on a clay-like surface. "I still have to put ice on it, but the inflamed tendon seems to be no problem now."

"My arm is better too," conceded Orantes, "but I didn't think so when the match first started. When I swung my arm for a ball, the racquet didn't want to go with it. It was a very funny feeling, and for awhile I just wanted to go home."

Smith, who won this tournament in 1971, also has been having arm problems, though his malady is centered in the elbow. He was far from the polished and aggressive player fans had been accustomed to seeing here.

The first five-set cliff-hanger involved the master of the comeback club, the 20-year-old Borg. Orantes explained the Swede's performance by saying where most players start on about an 80 percent level and descend to 40 percent as they get tired, Borg plays a whole match on one supreme level.

So the ultimate difference settled on Gottfried and his ability to take one of Borg's explosive topspin drives and return it well enough to rush the net for a volley. In the beginning, Borg's

Bjorn Borg defeating Brian Gottfried in U.S. Open competition at Forest Hills yesterday. Borg won in five sets.

Comeback by Smith Is Incomplete

The moment of truth came at the beginnnig of the third set. Stanley Roger Smith, the matador of championships past, had taken the first two sets from Manuel Orantes, and the Spaniard had all but conceded the ears and the tail.

"I was very worried," Orantes said later. "Yeah." I thought I was going home already. I didn't see too much hope for me."

But the moment passed unseized. Orantes, the defending champion, reached down, deper than he had assumed possible, and came up with a winning game. He beat Smith in the third set, edged him in a tiebreaker in the fourth and sent him off to his ice packs in the trainer's room in the fifth. The match lasted 2 hours 46 minutes, and when it was over the matador had fallen on his own sword.

"The third set," Smith told his friend and attorney, Donald Dell. "I should have had him in the third set. I should have jumped on him."

Certainly Orantes had seemed to be inviting the jumping. He had come to the United States Open tennis championships with damaged goods — a muscle problem in his left arm, his stroking arm. It had been questionable that he would even enter the tournament, doubtful thta he would last very long and almost inconceivable that he would win it.

And Smith, who had won at Forest Hills five years ago, was in the midst of a comeback that would have been complete had he won last night.

"The conditions were right," Smith said. "I felt confident out there. My arm didn't bother me at all."

Smith knew all too well what Orantes's arm might have felt like. Smith's right arm around the elbow had been a source of almost constant pain the last two years. Before the trouble he had been ranked No. 1 in the United States four times since 1969. But this year he had fallen, as if down a flight of stairs, to No. 12. His road back had seemed transcontinental. But, though he had lost, he was cruising now.

"I'm not playing this tournament for practice," he said. "Not for future reference." Last night was "for real." But, as Smith knew, and as he said later, "You got to win three sets out there." And Orantes won them.

It might have been a mental lapse that allowed Orantes back into the match, as Smith suggested. It might have been that Orantes suddenly regained the touch he had lacked. In any event, there was a change. And, even in the tiebreaker, when Smith pulled ever so close to victory, it was Orantes who controlled the flow.

"I thought I played well," Smith said. "In retrospect, I guess I'd have to be satisfied."

Orantes was thrilled. He had beaten

Canada Downs Sweden, 4 to 0

By ROBIN HERMAN

Special to The New York Times

TORONTO, Sept. 7 — Bob Gainey, playing in his first Canada Cup hockey game, scored two goals tonight as Team Canada defeated Team Sweden, 4-0. The Canadians, however, put on a dismal performance in beating the inconsistent Swedes and, particularly in the opening period, relied heavily on the sturdy goaltending of Rogie Vachon, who stopped 28 shots.

Gainey, a hard-checking defensive player, worked on a line with Darryl Sittler and Lanny McDonald as Scotty Bowman mixed and matched his other lines in a mainly unsuccessful effort to breathe some life into them.

They Do Not Pass

In steamy Maple Leaf Gardens, where the temperatures climbed to between 85 and 90 degrees, the sellout crowd of 16,485 displayed confused feelings about the slow-motion hockey they were seeing. Borje Salming, the Swedish member of the Toronto Maple Leafs, was greeted with a standing ovation, but the fans booed whenever the announcer repeated scores and penalties in French for the benefit of television viewers in this officially bilingual nation.

With Team U.S.A. tying Czechoslovakia, Team Canada leads the cup series as the only team with three victories.

Team Canada was playing poorly as a unit, with many of hockey's best playmakers unwilling to pass to one another. When they did pass, the receptions were unexpected and the receiver frequently overskated the puck.

On Winning, and What Goes With It football season begins, a few moments of reflection some American philosophic attitudes are both reflected by this entertainment might be ap-all the mass spectator sports, football may be the uctive in this regard because its conditions generate ional intensity. Because a team plays only once ere is a type of anticipatory buildup and long- ermath seldom found in baseball, basketball or hockey. Because the game itself is so closely modeled on battlefield tactics and warfare traditions and is so physically hazardous to the players, the passions that accompany every incident are heightened. And because it receives more attention and through schools, colleges and television—than sport, its capacity to influence the viewpoint of pants is amplified.

, then, simply as an example, the situation of the Raiders.

hings improved, and they became a contender. By y were league champions and took part in the sec- r Bowl game. They lost to Green Bay.

that time, in nine complete seasons, they have won lar-season and playoff games, tied 7 and lost 31. ve finished first in their division eight times and cond the other time (1971). No other football team ood a record over that nine-year span.

How Much Is Enough?

ight think therefore, that all those connected with lers enjoy a sense of great pride in what has been ished, and bask in universal respect and admiration. ey don't. They themselves, and the football commu- en obsessed by one fact: the Raiders have never per Bowl game, nor even qualified for one since bler, their mature quarterback, says he sometimes in the morning, between seasons, with the thought in his mind: "We've got to get to the Super

Madden, the 40-year-old coach whose seven-year matched by that of any other coach, is a strong- low-key personality not given to self-dramatization, play or romanticized rhetoric. Yet he agrees that the sees the Raiders as somehow incomplete until and they reach that Super Bowl rainbow.

Al Davis, the coach who became owner-manager and it the whole organization from scratch, acknowl- that under the existing value system, the Raiders tled to win "the big one."

w, it goes without saying that the proper business of competitors is to win. But to win what? How often? How long? Under what circumstances?

Single-minded, and simple-minded, focusing on one championship game as the be-all and end-all of success is a perversion even of the worship of success. It's one thing to prize excellence, as defined by victory under stipulated rules; it's an entirely different thing to slip into the assumption that anything less than the ultimate victory is of little value.

"We're used to hearing Vince Lombardi's remark about victory," says Davis. "That it's not the main thing, it's the only thing." We all sort of accept the idea that this is the system we live in, whether or not we sometimes have philosophic doubts. But lately it seems to have gone further, to a different question; not how much you win, but where you end up."

On Being Number One

Where you end up. The difference is a subtle one, but important. To honor especially the one who can climb to the top is fine; to denigrate everyone else as a "failure" no matter how high they do climb is a destructive, and recent, aberration.

The Raiders are only one example of a widespread condition. The disease is more virulent in college football and basketball, where, "No. 1 ranking" is the monomaniac goal of coaches and rooters, in a context where no rational system exists for determining any ranking at all. (The N.F.L., at least, produces its champion on the field, not through a poll).

It is easy to see why television networks, who sell commercial minutes at peak prices during a Super Bowl game, devote 17 weeks of high-pressure promotional propaganda to the proposition that only the final victory is worth anything. It is harder to understand why people who should know better, participants and spectators alike, succumb to it.

Yet they do, more and more. Teams that win division titles or season-long pennant races are lumped, in the public imagination, with "losers;" student-athletes who work and perform so well that they win enough to get to tournament and bowl games are made to feel second-rate when they finally lose a game there. Silver and bronze medal winners in the Olympics are defined by "they didn't win."

This unhealthy viewpoint can be combatted only by the public itself, by conscious attention to this kind of loss of perspective. The crucial difference is between accomplishment and status, between doing (winning as much as possible) and being (having that No. 1 label, one way or another). If accolades can be given only to one final winner, how can one justify the effort and expense of thousands of other competitors?

Perhaps, while automatically tuning out commercials, promos and pregame palaver, we might consider such questions occasionally.

Tareyton improves.

Charcoal is why.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency reported that charcoal is the best available method for filtering water.

History's No. 1 filter:

Charcoal helps freshen air in submarines and spacecraft, mellows the taste of fine bourbons and aids in auto pollution control.

Activated charcoal does something for cigarette smoke, too.

While ordinary filters reduce tar and nicotine, they also remove taste. Tareyton's unique two-part charcoal filter reduces tar and nicotine—but the taste is actually improved by charcoal.

Metropolitan College Football: C. W. Post Capable of Attaining Undefeated Sea[son]

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.

Although Dom Anile, the C. W. Post football coach, knew his teams had won 39 games and lost only 11 for a .780 percentage over the last five years, he did not know this placed the Pioneers fifth in the nation among Division III small-college teams for that period. He did not even know that his own coaching record of 59-22 in eight seasons at Post was 11th-best among Division III coaches.

"If I'd known these things last week, I'd have used them when I asked for a raise," Anile said. "I didn't get the raise."

He may be able to go in with more impressive figures next year at contract time since Post appears quite capable of winning all its games this fall. This team that lost only one game in 1975 is even better this year.

Improvement, however, seems to be the trend in the Metropolitan area for 1976. One reason is that more and more excellent athletes are playing football in the area. These players include Paul Brown of Kings Point, Tony Ferrara of Wagner, John Mohring of Post, Dennis DeMeo of Fordham, Don Brundridge of Seton Hall, Larry Gill of St. Peter's and Bob Girolamo of Hofstra.

C. W. POST

Anile stopped just short of predicting his Post team would win all of its games. He said, "We're going to stay up there. And we'll be there defensively."

John Mohring, a junior defensive end, "probably is the best player we've ever had here at Post," according to Anile, who starts his ninth season as the Pioneers' coach.

For years Post's offenses have been high-scoring units that have taken much of the pressure off the defense. There may be no need for so many points this fall although Anile is bubbling with optimism about his offense, also. Ernie Prodromides will start at quarterback with a returning backfield and experienced line. Post beat Brown in a scrimmage last Saturday. Most opponents rank Post as the strongest of the Met. area teams. There's no reason to argue with that.

WAGNER

Bob Hicks is almost as enthusiastic about Wagner's chances as Anile is about the C.W.Post outlook. "We're very optimistic," Hicks said. "We're experienced throughout the team and seniors dominate. If we start off well, we'll be O.K."

Like Post, Wagner's best player, Tony Ferrara, is a defensive end. He is one of the many seniors Hicks is counting upon. Glen Galante, the quarterback, is also a senior. "He's not very big or strong but he's an awfully smart quarterback," Hicks said. The coach plans to be throwing the ball about 40 percent of the time. Bob Grady, another of the seniors, caught 40 passes last year.

KINGS POINT

Clive Rush took the head coaching job Aug. 1, and found to his dismay "there weren't any films of our team or opponents. They just disappeared." The former Jets' and Patriots' coach found, however, that many of the players for the 1975 Merchant Marine team had not disappeared. That team had a 7-2 record. One of the players is Paul Brown, a 5-foot-7-inch senior running back who was eighth in the nation in rushing and third in scoring by Division III players last year.

Kings Point's defense has such good returning players as Fran Conte at end and Mark Delesdernier at tackle. Rush also found what has been true of Kings Point teams over the years—"They are small," the new coach said. "Defensively, we're puttting the pieces together. Offensively, we have a lot of work. We can't line up and slug it out with big teams."

HOFSTRA

The Flying Dutchmen lost their starting quarterback and two best running backs through injuries in the third game of the 1975 season.

Bill Leete, in his second season as coach, said, "Certainly we'll be a lot better than last year. We lost only three starters from the whole 1975 team and those offensive backs are healthy again." The return of Bob Girolamo to quarterback is the team's biggest asset. Chris Neefus and Chris Prifte are the runners. Each missed the last six games a year ago.

The offensive line is quite big with two good tackles, Bill Etherson and Andy Terrono, and a big transfer from Army, Bernard Wrezinski, at guard. Defensively Hofstra has Tony Petillo starting for the third season at end and Eric Kitt starting at the other end for the fourth year. Chuck Rogener is starting in the secondary for the third season. It's an experienced team that should do much better than 3-6, Hofstra's 1975 record.

MONTCLAIR STATE

Clary Anderson, the most successful coach in New Jersey football history, has retired. Fred Hill replaces him and has a good chance to improve upon Anderson's 1975 record of 4-4-2. That .500 campaign was the first nonwinning season for Anderson in more than 30 years coaching high school and college teams in Montclair, N.J.

The Indians will be switching offenses from the wishbone to a slot I. Walter Roberson, the tailback, and Bob Gardner, the fullback, should be just what a good "I" team needs. The offensive line needs rebuilding. The defense, led by Mike Christadore in the secondary, is good.

SETON HALL

Mitchell Goings, a national class quarter-miler, has transferred from the University of Florida to Seton Hall, where he will compete in both football and track. Don Brundridge has returned to Seton Hall after four years in the Navy. This pair give Seton Hall an impressive defensive backfield.

Coach Ed Manigan said: "Brundridge at safety is the best athlete out there. And Goings could give Seton Hall a record mile-relay team." The Pirates, who won only two of 10 games last year, are looking for much better things if injuries don't cut down a thin first string.

ST. PETER'S

The fourth varsity season for the Peacocks could be a second straight winning year. Coach Joe Coviello said: "It all depends upon the courtesy of our opponents. We can't lose anyone to injuries." Also, St. Peter's senior quarterback, Bobbie Morgan, is not the huskiest of players at 5-11 and only 145 pounds. But some returning starters at linebacker and defensive back, plus good speed on defense, make Coviello's team a difficult one to push around. St. Peter's shut out three teams while winning five of eight games last season. With an improved offensive line, a good receiver in Larry Gill and the experience of Morgan, St. Peter's has plenty to start with.

FORDHAM

Dennis DeMeo, the senior fullback in the Rams' wishbone, may become the first Fordham football player to gain over 2,000 yards in a career. He needs a bit more than 500 yards this season. Bob Bryant, called a "super safety" by Coach Dave Rice, is also back. But maybe these good players won't be around when Fordham ... comes as good as Rice wants it to be.

"Realistically, it may be another year before we take off," Rice said. "We have some athletes but the thing to do is keep them healthy so the athletes we have are on the field and not off it."

lines or in the locker room, that's his prerogative.

Duane Thomas Is Dropped

The reduction of squad rosters to 43 players took out of football such famous names as Duane Thomas, Otis Taylor, Ron Johnson, John Matuszak, Terry Hanratty and Jack Snow.

Thomas, handicapped by a leg muscle pull, and Johnson, the former Giant, could not make the Dallas varsity. The 34-year-old Taylor, another former all-pro performer worn down by injuries, was let go by Houston.

Matuszak, the N.F.L.'s No. 1 draft choice in 1973, was dropped by the Redskins after joining the team late in its training schedule. Hanratty, a Steeler reserve quarterback for seven seasons, and Snow, who caught more passes for the Rams than anyone since Elroy (Crazy Legs) Hirsch, were all-Americans at Notre Dame.

Some of those dropped did not react kindly. Dave Green, the Cincinnati kicker displaced by Chris Bahr of Penn State and Pat McInally from Harvard, said, "This is the thanks I get." Jim Del Gaizo, the quarterback who did well in Miami's preseason games, said, "My reward is a kick in the butt." The Dolphins cut the 29-year-old Del Gaizo to keep 42-year-old Earl Morrall.

The leading trade came when Detroit sent a 35-year-old quarterback, Bill Munson, to Seattle for a draft choice. The Seahawks took Munson after their rookie starter, Jim Zorn, had four passes intercepted last Saturday in a 45-28 loss to Oakland.

In his 132d deal, George Allen of the Redskins obtained a young reserve guard from the Rams, Dan Nugent, for future draft choices. Nugent will probably start in place of Paul Laaveg, on the injured reserve list and therefore out for the season.

Other seasoned players let go were Bob Grim and Bob Newton by Chicago, Dave Osborn and Oscar Reed by Minnesota, Milt Morin by Cleveland, Robert Holmes by Houston, Bruce Gossett by San Diego, John Wilbur by Philadelphia and Jim Marsalis by Kansas City.

WANT NEW SHOCKS? PRICE NEW CARS.

Why didn't they tell you all this in the ads?

Not the prices in the ads. The prices in the showroom where you have to pay for the advertised car plus the unadvertised options/accessories needed to complete the car.

But not in our Volvo showroom. We sell cars the Volvo factory actually finished before shipping out. So, naturally, the prices on our Volvos are not low to begin with. But what you have to add is not high to end with either.

© 1976 VOLVO OF AMERICA CORPORATION. LEASING AVAILABLE.
THERE ARE A LOT OF CARS IN VOLVO'S PRICE CLASS. BUT NOT IN VOLVO'S CLASS.

Mets' 16-Hit Attack Routs Cubs, 11-0

Associated Press

Bud Harrelson of the Mets forcing Cubs' Rob Sperring in first half of a double play at Chicago yesterday.

By THOMAS ROGERS
Special to The New York Times

CHICAGO, Sept. 7—Jon Matlack suggested today that all the Met pitching staff needs to win any particular game is to be supported by "a halfway decent defense and four runs."

While registering his 15th victory today, the lanky left-hander received almost an embarrassment of riches. The Mets pounded 16 hits (and made only one error) in an 11-0 trouncing of the Cubs before 5,281 fans at Wrigley Field.

There was nothing exceptional about the drubbing that the Met hitters gave five Chicago pitchers. While winning six of eight games here this season, New York batters have produced 102 hits, 14 home runs and 67 runs (an average of more than eight runs a game). In all other National League parks, the Mets have averaged about 3.5 runs a game.

"It was definitely not one of my better efforts," was Matlack's description of the eight-hit effort that gave him the league lead in shutouts with six. "I had good stuff, but it was a continual struggle. They hit some hard-hit balls that we caught."

With the help of two double plays and some fielding gems by Ed Kranepool at first base and Bruce Boisclair in center field, only one Cub reached third base against Matlack.

On the other hand, third base was a busy way-station for Met base runners. Mike Phillips in the first inning and Leo Foster in the ninth loped over it while running out home runs. And John Milner pulled up there in the fourth inning after lining his third hit, a triple into the right-field corner.

Foster, a 25-year-old utility infielder that the Mets purchased from Tidewater on July 22, enjoyed his best day at bat as a major-leaguer. The third baseman walked, singled twice, cracked his first homer of the season and drove in five runs.

Harrelson Enjoys Good Day at Bat

"I feel I can play every day," he said afterward "But nobody owes me anything. I have to stay healthy and go out on the field and do the job. If I can't do that, I'll stay a utility player. But its tough on this team with Bud Harrelson at shortstop and Roy Staiger at third base."

Harrelson had one of his best batting days of the season, lining three singles and scoring a pair of runs.

Playing in his first major league game was Lee Mazzilli of Brooklyn, an outfielder the Mets brought up today from Jackson (Miss.) of the Texas League. The 21-year-old graduate of Lincoln High School in Brooklyn entered the game in the seventh inning as a replacement for Milner in left field. He grounded out to the pitcher in his only time at bat. He had batted .292 with 13 homers at Jackson.

After having taken the first two games of an eight-game road trip, the Mets will attempt to complete a sweep of the Cubs tomorrow with Tom Seaver hurling for New York against Steve Renko and a probable assortment of Cub relief pitchers.

Sox were hitting a lot of ground balls to Yankee infielders: three in the first inning, two in the second, two more in the fourth and the fifth, one in the sixth and three in the seventh.

Two of the grounders were hit by Carlton Fisk, the Boston catcher who was one of the heroes of 1975. But, in the top of the seventh, Fisk finally got one of Ellis's pitches into the air, driving it down the left-field line into the seats for his 14th home run of the year and Boston's first run of the night.

Ellis Loses Control

Then, in the eighth, needing six outs to win, Ellis lost his control and his role in the game. Jim Rice opened with a ground single to center, Dwight Evans walked, and Rick Miller, a pinch-hitter, also walked. Ellis had fired two quick strikes. Now the bases were loaded with nobody out. Nobody, that is, except Ellis.

He was relieved by Tidrow, who promptly threw one pitch and got two outs. The pitch was slammed by Rick Burleson to third base, where Nettles stepped on the bag for a forceout and then whipped the ball to the plate. Munson not only blocked the plate but also put the tage on Rice to complete the double play. Then one more pitch and one more out, Denny Doyle lined it to Gamble, in right field, to kill the rally.

Palomino Title Bout Put Off

Orantes and Borg Ra[illegible] From Two-Set Defi[illegible]

ground strokes were short enough for Gottfried, 24, to make approach shots and win two sets. But when they became longer, Gottfried's approaches no longer succeeded.

"Crises? I don't mind crises. Really, I don't," emphasized the second-seeded Borg after his 3½-hour triumph. "It's good to have tough matches, though five sets can wear you down if you're not careful. It's good I have a rest tomorrow."

After the first set reached 6-6, the 6-foot Gottfried had little trouble capturing the tiebreaker, 7 points to 3. He took the heart out of Borg's strategy and the meat out of his drives when, at 3-3 in the second set, he rallied from 40-0 to break Borg's service.

One point typified Gottfried's play at that moment. When his first drive caught the top of the net, bounced up and ticked the net again on the way down, Borg made a tremendous get, flicking the ball almost straight up and over the net. But the lunging Gottfried was able to send the ball looping over Borg's head for the winner, and the young Swede could only return to the service line to double-fault.

Borg's Rally Anticipated

"I've seen Bjorn play a thousand times, and I know he doesn't get disturbed," said Gottfried afterward. "I've seen him come from two sets down so often I expect him to do it almost every time. I knew this, and I also knew the match was a best-of-five. Just because I'd won the first two sets didn't mean at all I was winning the match."

So the classic serve-and-volleyer (Gottfried) was forced to the backcourt while the game's emerging topspin stylist (Borg) lengthened his shots and took the momentum—as well as the points—away from his opponent.

"The baseline's his game, not mine," Brian explained. "I had to try to go up to the net. At Wimbledo[n] ... met, he passed me about ... Today, it was only 100 th[e] ... shows I'm improving, thoug[h] ... winning."

Borg and Gottfried have ... times, with the Swede unbe[aten] ... duels. Gottfried denied, how[ever] ... was any revenge motive in ...

"This may sound silly," ... "but I don't think about ... losing when I go out on ... I just go out to play the ... I can. If I do, that's enoug[h] ... me. And I was satisfied tod[ay] ... think I played well."

Before departing, Gottf[ried] ... Borg one of the three best ... the title. "The other two ... Connors and Ilie Nastase," ... "All three are playing extre[mely] ..."

Borg offered a slight ... though: "I'm not moving to ... said, "and I haven't for th[e] ... matches [including the mat[ch] ... Jaime Fillol). I needed a lot ... on my body and legs after ... lot, but that's a day-to-day ... could change overnight."

Team USA, Czech Six Tie, 4 to 4

By JOHN S. RADOSTA
Special to The New York Times

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 7—Team USA and the Czechoslovak squad played to a tie tonight in a Canada Cup of hockey match at the Philadelphia Spectrum.

The world champion Czechoslovak team survived a four-goal outburst in the second period to erase the chance of an upset by the American squad. Augusta, a forward, scored the goal with 5:54 left in the game.

Patrick Gets 2 Goals

After a scoreless first period, the teams combined to score six goals in the second period, four of them by Americans. The crowd of 9,515 gave the Americans a standing ovation at the end of the period.

Patrick led the American attack with two goals in less than a minute. At one point he took a pass from Harvey Bennett on the left side of the Czechoslovak net and beat the visitors' goalie, Jiri Holecek.

Forty-one seconds later he took the puck on a pass from Warren Williams at the blue line and sailed in, one-on-one, on the goal for his second.

The Czechoslovaks opened the scoring on a power play at 1:06 of the period, the score being credited to Pouzka. Hangleben tied the score four minutes afterward and then Patrick added his pair.

The Czechslovaks countered with Nedomansky's goal, and the Americans then followed with Ftorek's to make the score 4-2.

In the first period the Americans were outshot, 15 to 9, but actually they outplayed the visitors with strenuous wrestling. Mike Curran's goaltending kept the Americans alive, especially in the face of three short-handed situations.

A referee from the National Hockey League, Bruce Hood, took a lot of boos because of his consistent calls against the Americans while he ignored Czechoslovak infractions. Hangsleben vented out his frustration by giving Vladislav Stastny the butt end of his stick. Hood did not see it.

Canada Downs Sweden, 4 to 0, in Cup Hockey

There were many miscues in the defensive zone as well, with Denis Potvin and Bobby Orr in particular becoming entangled in each other's paths and leaving spaces unprotected.

The Swedes, meanwhile, managed, with dogged forechecking, to outshoot the Canadians, 15 to 8, in the first period and regained their composure after playing poorly in the first two minutes of the game when Bobby Hull scored at 4:12 for Canada.

After that Team Canada was kept out of danger primarily on the work of Vachon in the goal. Just moments apart, Vachon snapped out his glove hand to catch a slapshot by Salming and then stopped Anders Hedberg's shot on a two-on-one breakaway.

The Canadians were all skating fruitlessly in loops and circles, their sticks stretched out on the ice waiting for a pass from a teammate. With the Swedes playing a more collective game, the opponents relied a little less on the bedrock solid defensive work of Salming. Initially, they skated and passed well and, when concentrating, were able to take a man out with good checks along the boards.

But when Team Canada encountered a stroke of good luck in the middle of the game and Gainey scored to make it 2-0, the Swedish game began to deteriorate. Hardy Aaström, the Swedish goalie, had stopped a slapshot by Lanny McDonald, but he pushed the rebound right out to Gainey, who knocked the puck into the goal.

Canadians Strike Again

Gaining some momentum on a power play, Team Canada scored just after Hedberg's time in the penalty box had run out as little Marcel Dionne took a bold shot that flew in to give Canada a three-goal lead. The second-period shots reflected the reversal of the game's initial trend. Canada had 15 shots this time and Sweden had 6.

Sweden had set a pattern in its two previous games (a 5-2 victory over the United States and a 3-3 tie with the Soviet Union) of playing an excellent first period and then losing control of the game rapidly in the middle period. So it seemed this game.

Soviet Six Sinks Finland, 11-3

MONTREAL, Sept. 7 (AP)—Viktor Zhluktov scored four goals and Vladimir Vikulov and Alexander Maltsev tallied twice apiece tonight as the Soviet Union routed Finland, 11-3, in a Canada Cup hockey game. Zhluktov scored twice in each of the first two periods as the Soviet six sent the Finns to their third lopsided loss of the tournament. The Finns were crushed, 11-2, by Team Canada in their opener and downed 8-0, by Czechoslovakia Sunday night.

The Russians, meanwhile, won for the first time after a loss to the Czechoslovaks and a tie with Sweden. The Soviet Union took a 4-2 lead in the first period, scoring three times on power plays.

Policeman Killed, 4 Hurt In Crash of Motorcycle

DOUGLAS, ISLE OF MAN, England, Sept. 7 (AP)—A police constable was killed today and two ambulance attendants and two race marshals were injured when a motorcycle went out of control and crashed during a race at the Isle of Man Tourist Trophy Meeting.

Constable Denis Hamer was on duty during the junior grand prix event when the crash took place at the village of Union Mills. Kevin Ainscough, racing for the first time on the Isle of Man course, lost control of his 350cc Yamaha, careened across the road and struck a group of people. Ainscough was hospitalized with leg injuries and concussion.

Wayne Hays Is Hospitalized After Pickup Truck Collision

Former Representative Wayne L. Hays, 65 years old, was admitted at the Barnesville, Ohio Medical Center in "very good" condition yesterday after the pickup truck he was driving collided with another truck near Wheeling W. Va. Mr. Hays, who recently resigned from Congress over a sex and payroll scandal, suffered rib bruises, according to his personal physician, Dr. Richard Phillips. Ohio County sheriff's deputies said no citations were issued in the accident, which took place on W. Va. 88 about 30 miles from the Hays home.

and the latest on Long Island were in the Lloyd Harbor area during this summer, according to various sources. Westchester had a run of such cases five to seven years ago, with the last perhaps two years ago in Bedford.

"I don't want to make folk heroes out of them," said Detective Capt. Thomas Keegan of the Greenwich (Conn.) Police Department. "We think a lot of people are involved, on an organized, informal basis."

Identity No Secret

"We know who they are," said Ray Newman, a detective in the North Castle (N.Y.) Police Department, who is the Westchester coordinator of the investigation.

The problem is, Mr. Newman admits, they have not been able to catch the main criminals in the act.

"There is a father of around 65 whose three daughters all married good burglars. They rented a house for $1,800 a month in Armonk, right where I live. I almost flipped when I found out. We harassed them out of town by following them all the time, arresting the father, with $3,000 in his pocket, for vagrancy. Now I wish I knew where they were, so we could catch them."

According to Mr. Newman, the "dinner burglars" drive Cadillacs and Rolls-Royces and live elegantly, despite their migratory line of work. They have a good sense of value, rarely taking cheap jewelry (their largest haul on Long Island was $189,000). But he does not picture them as David Niven types, wearing velvet dinner jackets and mingling socially with the people they victimize.

Rather, they are a "criminal element" that happens to be very good at surveillance, at scaling 14-foot grillwork and leaping from a second-story porch in an emergency. A few fringe members have been arrested over the years, Mr. Newman said.

Detectives display almost a sense of admiration for the "M.O.," or modus operandi, of the burglars.

a darkened room without tripping over things, knowing somebody might be in the house," said Detective Sgt. Frank Johansen of the Nassau burglary squad. "A lot of house burglaries, it's kids ripping off stuff to sell. This is a professional burglar. He knows what he's doing."

The detectives agree the burglars like to operate during the dinner, before burglar alarms are switched on, and while guests are clustered in the dining area, which in large estates is often far from the bedroom area. This was the case in the April 24 burglary at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Weicker, parents of the Connecticut Senator. The Weickers had just moved into their home on Skunk's Misery Road in Lattingtown, L.I., and were entertaining six other couples. Their one-story ranch was lighted on both sides for guests to find the driveway in the two-acre setting.

Slopping through the dark woods on a rainy, windy night, the burglar entered a back bedroom with a "pure lush, white wall-to-wall carpet," as one detective noted. But true to his gentlemanly instincts, the burglar slipped something over his muddy shoes "and didn't leave a mark on that rug," the detective said.

Then the burglar carefully barricaded the doors to the front of the house—as he always does—and selected $48,000 worth of jewels before making his departure. The only mistake he made was taking a bag of medicine Mr. Weicker was assembling to take to his boat. Thinking the bag contained narcotics, the burglar took it with him, but later discarded it in the woods near Lattingtown Road. This did not give the police a clue to the identity to the burglar, but merely indicated the direction he had taken.

"It also meant somebody picked him up," said Detective Lieut. Fred Pawel of the Nassau police. "You couldn't and you can't park your car on the road without the police watching."

The detectives say an experienced burglar would not need "inside" information about the houses they have robbed nor would they have to "case" the house for a long time before acting.

"Whoever it is, he knows that most burglar alarms are not connected until the people go to bed," Sgt. Johansen said. "The people sometimes don't know they've been robbed until much later."

2 F.B.I. AGENTS TOLD THEY NEEDN'T TESTIFY

Agreement for 'Interviews' Follows a Ruling in Court of Appeals Upholding Their Subpoenas

By BARBARA CAMPBELL

The Justice Department yesterday won an attempt in court to compel two special agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation to appear before a special grand jury investigating allegedly illegal burglaries and possible criminal violations of civil rights by them and other agents.

But hours later, attorneys for the Justice Department and the two agents said the agents would not have to appear.

The apparent victory for the Justice Department came when the United States Courto f Appeals for the Second Circuit refused to stay the enforcement of a subpoena.

It was not immediately clear why attorneys for the Justice Department, after taking a consistently strong stance that the men must appear and after countering all legal attempts by the agents to avoid appearing, changed their minds.

"We have worked out an agreement to the extent that certain interviews would obviate the need for grand jury appearances by some of the agents," said Stephen Horn, a lawyer for the Department of Justice interviewed in a fourth-floor office at the Federal Courthouse in New York City yesterday hours after the Court of Appeals said the F.B.I. agents must appear before the grand jury.

Appearance Doubted

However, Martin W. Schwartz, one of the attorneys representing the two agents, Philip J. Newpher and Claiborne J. Poche, and approximately 28 other agents who have been subpoenaed stated unequivacobly:

"We do not anticipate at the present time that there will ever be a need for any of our clients to appear before the presently empaneled special grand jury."

The acts being investigated by the grand jury allegedly occurred in New York City in the last five years.

Mr. Schwartz, who was also present in Mr. Horn's office yesterday afternoon, added that "alternative means of complying with the subpoena are being worked out with the prosecutor."

Mr. Schwartz added that the United States Attorney General, Edward H. Levi, "has taken certain steps to safeguard national security" and that agents who give information "will be protected from criminal prosecution and criminal discipline."

On Friday, the agents lost an attempt in United States District Court at Foley Square to have the subpoenas against them quashed. They had maintained that they should not be compelled to go before a grand jury because they would have to divulge information that they are prohibited from disclosing by security regulations.

However, J. Stanley Pottinger, head of the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division, had argued that "it would border on fantasy to believe that the national interest is at stake."

Yesterday morning the agents petitioned a three-man panel in the Circuit Court of Appeals to be granted a stay of the enforcement of the subpoena hours before the grand jury was to have convened.

Both Mr. Horn and Mr. Schwartz emphasized that their agreement had been made subsequent to the decision by the Court of Appeals.

Money to Aid Baby Was in the Mails When Dog Attacked

By CHARLES KAISER

When Joanne Bashold telephoned her parents last week to tell them she had given birth to a baby daughter, she sounded "terribly happy," her mother recalled yesterday, and she asked for $23 to buy a crib.

Her mother put a $25 money order in the mail the next morning, but it had not arrived when Miss Bashold left her 5-day-old daughter on the floor of her East Harlem apartment on Monday, alone in the bare flat with her German shepherd dog. When she returned home, her daughter was dead, killed by the dog.

Miss Bashold was released in her own recognizance yesterday after being arraigned on charges of criminal negligence-homicide and was ordered to take a psychiatric examination.

Her long blond hair pulled back in a ponytail, Miss Bashold was wearing a bulky green sweater, light blue slacks and fur slippers. Waiting for her arraignment, she sat still, her eyes staring at the floor, her hands shifting nervously over her knees.

Accompanied by Cousin

A cousin of Miss Bashold's was in the courtroom at her mother's request, and Miss Bashold later left in her company. An elderly man with a cane, was also there, and though he would not identify himself, he did talk about "his friend."

He said he had met Miss Bashold, who is 24 years old, when she was living in an apartment on West End Avenue. When an Assistant District Attorney told Judge Hyman Solniker that the defendant should be kept in custody to prevent a suicide attempt, the elderly man remarked to a reporter: "That's ridiculous," "She's a strict Catholic, a believing Catholic."

He added that she had refused to have an abortion because she did not want to "take a human life." One of her lawyers agreed that she "was aware she could have an abortion—but she wanted the baby."

Her parents, who live in Cortland, Ohio, population 2,525, had not seen her since she left home three and a half years ago. She is a graduate of Cortland High School.

Miss Bashold, her mother said, was the oldest of five daughters and had never asked for money since she came to New York in 1973. "It's the first time," she said. "She would never call, she would write—but she would never say what she was doing."

Miss Bashold's lawyers said she had held many different jobs and she produced more than 50 pay receipts yesterday. Her welfare records show she worked for Temp Jobs from October 1975 through May 1976, but the manager said yesterday he did not remember her. "I see new faces every day," he said.

Old Baez Image Is Slow to Fade

By JOYCE MAYNARD

Joan Baez has cut her long black hair. She is 35 years old now, and she likes to wear good shoes. But an image lingers of Joan Baez at 18, singing "All My Trials" at the 1959 Newport Folk Festival, with her long hair streaming down her back, or Joan Baez at 21 embracing a guitar on the cover of Time magazine, or Joan Baez "the queen of folk music"—at a time when that was the music to be queen of—singing barefoot on a California mountaintop.

One also remembers Joan Baez ironing her hair beside a boyish-looking Bob Dylan, surrendering to a California work farm to serve time after taking part in demonstrations against the Vietnam war, and, roundly pregnant, telling the crowd at Woodstock that she and the baby were fine, and dedicating an album of hopeful love songs to her husband, David Harris, who was serving a prison term for draft evasion.

Miss Baez is divorced now, and the mother of a 6-year-old son. Reviewers of recent albums have called her "anachronistic" and noted that her voice "isn't improving with age." She continues to record an album every year or so, but her concert appearances are infrequent. Still, every ticket was sold out weeks ago for the concert she—along with Peter Seeger and a Chilean group called Aparcoa—will give Friday at the Felt Forum "to benefit the restoration of human rights in Chile."

Joan Baez on tour with Bob Dylan last year
No longer so vividly political, but still responds to a cause

Speaks of 'The Struggle'

Less vividly political, in recent years, than she was in the 60's (when she refused to pay the part of her taxes that would have gone to defense spending, and urged young women to "say yes to boys who said no" to the draft), Miss Baez has made an exception for the Chile benefit, explaining that while there are a lot of causes deserving of her support, "this one seemed specially important."

Miss Baez has never seen herself simply as a singer. She speaks often of "the struggle" and of her "job" in the peace movement. She sees this current phase of her life as a time for reflecting, though. "The world is in just as horrendous a state as ever," she said recently in a telephone interview from her California home, with a dog barking once or twice in the background. "This just isn't a time for going out and doing much about it."

'Final Letting Go'

She spoke in a forthright relaxed manner, laughing often, in a voice instantly recognizable to anyone familiar with her concerts or an old concert album in which she says, "if nobody would object, I think I'll take off my shoes."

"For a full year now," she continued, "I have not been involved in very active politicizing. For months, I felt guilty about that. I was so relieved when I read somewhere that even Gandhi—the only one who ever made any sense to me—took some years off. These days I stay home a lot and give time to my son."

Gabriel Harris, at 6, doesn't sing very much, although he sometimes asks his mother to dance with him. "He likes," she said, "to talk about money." He is, she added, "my greatest joy."

"The final letting go, for me," Miss Baez said, "was taking my son to Disneyland and putting the quarter in the machine for him to shoot missiles at B-52's. The sound was so realistic—just like Vietnam. Gabe was getting very happy. He said, 'Mom, you've got to try it.' So I did."

If that did not sound quite like the old Joan Baez, it may be because she does not always sound like Joan Baez these days. "I'm the same person I've always been," she said. "But older, maybe a little more realistic. And of course the times have changed, too."

"For me, the old songs have never lost their beauty," she said, adding that sometimes, late at night, when she's alone, she still sings the ballads like "Barbara Allen" and "Cherry Tree Carol" that first made her famous. "But most of the kids in the audiences at rock concerts today wouldn't understand."

"I have a theory," she said, "that people play this very loud music so they won't have to confront the quietness. They don't want to think about death. A lot of my songs, especially the songs I first played, were about death. There didn't seem anything morbid about that to me. Death is a big part of life. But people don't want to remember right now. Not Vietnam, or even Barbara Allen."

More and more of the songs that Miss Baez performs and records now are the ones she herself wrote—about Bob Dylan, or the breakup of her marriage, or people she has encountered over the years. "I've been described as neurotically honest," she said. "It's just that I write whatever surfaces."

In addition to having recently completed a new album of songs (all original compositions) to be released at the end of this month, Joan Baez is working on a book about her life. The book will pick up where an earlier biographical work, "Daybreak," ended. "My writing is a little less mushy now," said the singer who once wrote, "My life is a crystal teardrop."

People Approach Her

If her writing, and her repertory, and her activeness, and her hair, and maybe her voice, have changed a bit since the 60's, Miss Baez says that her basic concerns—world peace, and music, probably in that order—have not. "I'll probably be doing much the same thing when I'm 60," she said. "I don't have any problem with the idea of growing older, or changing direction. If the problem exists, it's other people's, not mine.

"People come up to me a lot to tell me who they think I am, based on some 1960's image of me as the Madonna. I'm very far from that. I'm addicted to good things. The only three places where I'll shop in this country are I. Magnin, Joseph Magnin, and Saks, although I try to ease the guilt by getting four of one outfit and giving three away.

"If I had the time, I'd fly to Paris for my clothes," said Miss Baez, who once sang barefoot in a burlap dress. "People just look at me in my Magnin suit now and say, 'Oh, the madonna's wearing a Magnin suit.' The image dies hard."

Joan Micklin Silver Prepares To Film 'Between the Lines'

Joan Micklin Silver, the independent director whose first film, "Hester Street," scored with the critics and public alike, will start shooting her second production, "Between the Lines," in Boston on Monday.

Mrs. Silver, who wrote the screenplay for "Hester Street" from a story by Abraham Cahan, has collaborated with Fred Barron on the script for the new film, a comedy about life at an underground newspaper in Boston. Her cast will include some of the younger actors seen recently on Broadway and in films—Stephen Collins, Lindsay Crouse, Jeff Goldblum, Bruno Kirby, Gwen Welles, Bill Eikenberry, John Heard and Lewis J. Stadlen. In addition, there will be special appearances by Michael J. Pollard, Lane Smith and Brian de Palma, the director.

"Between the Lines," like "Hester Street," will be produced by Midwest Films, the company headed by Mrs. Silver's husband, Raphael.

After two weeks of shooting in Boston, the production will go to New York, where the film will be completed. "Between the Lines" will be ready for release next spring.

Revival of 'Going Up' Goes Into Rehearsal

"Going Up," the musical about the early days of aviation that was the hit of the summer at the Goodspeed Opera House in East Haddam, Conn., started rehearsals yesterday for its advent on Broadway. It opens Sept. 19 at the Golden Theater. Previews will start Sept. 8.

Bill Gile, who directed an earlier Goodspeed success, "Very Good Eddie," and Dan Siretta, who did that show's choreography, will have the same assignments for "Going Up." The musical concerns a self-proclaimed aviation expert who has never flown a plane until he is forced to race against an expert flyer to win the girl he loves. "Going Up" was first done on Broadway on Dec. 25, 1917, and ran for 351 performers. It had the novelty of being the first musical about the airplane.

With book and lyrics by Otto Harbach and music by Louis B. Hirsch, the revival features Brad Blaisdell, Walter Bobbie, Maureen Brennan, Noel Craig, Lee H. Doyle, Kimberly Farr, Pat Lysinger, Ronn Robinson and Michael Tartel in a cast of 18.

Gelsey Kirkland Back In 'Turning Point'

Gelsey Kirkland, the ballerina whom illness forced out of the cast of the film "The Turning Point" six weeks ago, has recovered sufficiently to rejoin the production.

However, Miss Kirkland will not be seen in the leading role, for which she had originally been cast—that of Shirley MacLaine's daughter—but will instead perform in a ballet sequence for the film, dancing the "Corsair" pas de deux with her frequent partner in the American Ballet Theater, Mikail Baryshnikov. Shooting for the pas de deux will be shot one day next week in the Shrine Auditorium in Los Angeles.

Leslie Browne replaced Miss Kirkland as Miss MacLaine's daughter in the 20th Century-Fox film being directed by Herbert Ross from a screenplay by Arthur Laurents.

Kirkland McCarthy
New season, new assignments

Kevin McCarthy Signs For 'Poor Murderer'

Kevin McCarthy, recently seen in the Robert Altman movie "Buffalo Bill and the Indians," will return to the stage in "Poor Murderer," a play by the Czechoslovak writer Pavel Kohout. Mr. McCarthy will be a co-star with Laurence Luckinbill and Maria Schell.

"Poor Murderer," described by its director, Herbert Berghof, as "a psycho thriller," will have its premiere Oct. 20 at the Ethel Barrymore Theater after a week of previews.

Set in a mental clinic, the production will include in its cast Larry Gates, Paul Sparer, Ernest Graves, Peter Maloney, Julie Garfield and Felicia Montealegre. Howard Bay is designing the sets and lighting, with Patricia Zipprodt doing the costumes.

Music: Debut

Calvin Simmons Conducts American Symphony

Calvin Simmons, a black conductor associated with the Los Angeles Philharmonic, made his New York debut Sunday night with the American Symphony in Lincoln Center's Damrosch Park. Very lanky, very spry, he is only 25 years old, and looks it. But he led the orchestra with plenty of confidence and authority.

The major work of the over-familiar program was Dvorak's Eighth Symphony. Mr. Simmons, who studied at the Curtis Institute with Max Rudolf and Rudolf Serkin, was most in his element where the music was outgoing and effusive—the symphony's outer movements rang with enthusiasm. The more reflective Adagio was patchy and inelastic. While there was nothing coarse about the performance, more poetry and subtlety would have helped.

The evening's piano soloist was Alan Marks, at 1971 Juilliard graduate. Mr. Marks's interpretation of Rachmaninoff's Rhapsody on a Theme by Paganini was technically efficient but relatively bland. Damrosch Park's speakers and microphones undoubtedly contributed to the dryness of the pianist's palette.

Mr. Simmons opened the program with a spirited performance of Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" Overture. The concert, which was free and well-attended, was the final event of the 1976 Lincoln Center Out-of-Doors Festival.

Princess Grace Back on Stage For Edinburgh Poetry Reading

EDINBURGH, Sept. 7 (Reuters) — Princess Grace of Monaco, the former film star Grace Kelly of Philadelphia, made a triumphant return to the entertainment world at the Edinburgh International Festival last night.

Princess Grace was one of the three performers in a poetry recital entitled "The American Heritage," arranged as a tribute to the United States Bicentennial. The capacity audience of 300 in Edinburgh's St. Cecilia's Hall gave an enthusiastic reception to readings from poets whose work mirrored the progress of the United States from the earliest Colonial days.

Starting with the works of Anne Bradsheet, one of America's first poets and a Quaker immigrant born in England in 1612, the readings ranged through the 19th-century classics of American literature to such 20th-century figures as Carl Sandburg, Ogden Nash, T. S. Eliot and Robert Frost.

Princess Grace seemed completely at home, although she did fluff a couple of her lines. She recovered immediately and only a very attentive listener would have been aware of her mistakes.

Fellow performers included Richard Kiley, the American actor, and Richard Pasco, a Briton. Although their voices displayed a wider range and their dramatization of the readings was superior, their performances did nothing to detract from the real star of the show.

Princess Grace is giving four performances at the festival, and all have been completely sold out for months.

George Harrison Guilty of Plagiarizing, Subconsciously, a '62 Tune for a '70 Hit

George Harrison, the former Beatle, was found guilty yesterday of "subconsciously" plagiarizing the 1962 John Mack tune "He's So Fine" for Mr. Harrison's 1970 hit record, "My Sweet Lord."

Judge Richard Owen of the United States District Court in Manhattan, a composer himself, ruled that Mr. Harrison was guilty of copyright infringement, although the judge concluded. "I do not believe he did so deliberately."

Judge Owen scheduled Nov. 8 for trial on the issue of damages in the lawsuit brought against Mr. Harrison by the Bright Tunes Music Corporation, which owns the copyright to "He's So Fine."

"It is clear," the judge said, "that 'My Sweet Lord is the very same song as 'He's So Fine.' This is, under the law infringement of copyright and is no less so even though subconsciously accomplished."

"He's So Fine" was one of the top hits in England in 1963, Judge Owen said. Years later Mr. Harrison began putting together his "My Sweet Lord" during a singing engagement in Copenhagen, Judge Owen said, and completed it in London. The song was issued by Apple Records, the Beatles' recording company.

Judge Owen said it was apparent from the trial evidence that Mr. Harrison had not been conscious of the fact that he was plagiarizing the theme of "He's So Fine."

"I conclude," he said, that the composer, "in seeking musical materials to clothe his thought . . . there came to the surface of his mind a particular combination that pleased him as being one he felt would be appealing to a prospective listener." Mr. Harrison's subconscious mind, Judge Owen said, "knew this combination of sounds would work because it already had worked in a song his conscious mind did not remember."

was Van Cliburn, the pianist, who said he was most sympathetic. He recalled a time he had appeared at a concert in Buffalo and, as he played the first note, the pedals fell from the piano. Mr. Cliburn even went forward to where the stagehands were working and tried to lend a hand.

Before the opera there was a dinner at the Italian Embassy attended by Vice President and Mrs. Rockefeller, Donna Leone, wife of the Italian President, and the United States Ambassador to Italy, John Volpe, who was instrumental in arranging the La Scala visit.

The performance was at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, which marks its fifth anniversary omorrow. At the reception following the opera, a large birthday cake was to be brought out at midnight.

The audience includede Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, Secretary of Commerce Elliot L. Richardson, President Ford's special representative for trade negotiations and Mrs. Frederick B. Dent, the Ambassador of Italy and Mrs. Roberto Gaja and other Federal officials attended. Mr. Cliburn was there escorting Nancy Hanks, chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts, and Mrs. Gwendolyn Cafrizt, a well-known Washington hostess, attended wih Robert McMillan. Many Italian journalists were in attendance, and Italian appeared to be the language of the evening.

The delay, according to a Kennedy Center official, was caused by the interplay betwen a short in a line and a malfunctioning fuse.

Umberto Saffiotti, a doctor with the National Institutes of Health, said he delay was especially ironic given La Scaa's repuation for starting on time. At the opera company's home theater there is a clock over the stage, and all latecomers are barred. "They pride themselves on their punctuality," he said.

Kennedy Center Drawing Throngs

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7 (AP)—The John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts says that in its first five years it has presented enough performances to fill nearly 555 days.

Drama and musical comedy accounted for 7,100 hours, ballet and other dance for 1,780 hours, symphonic music for 1,600 hours. There also were solo recitals, choral music, grand opera and miscellaneous events. Free events accounted for 980 hours. The total was 13,314 hours.

There were 15 million visitors to the center, the third most popular attraction here. Of that number, 1,825,000 took the center's free guided tours.

Total paid admissions to events amounted to 6.8 million tickets, and 550,000 half-price tickets were sold to the elderly, students, servicemen and others.

Count Maintained for Two Years

The National Park Service, which maintains the center as a memorial to President Kennedy, has maintained an accurate count of visitors for the last two years. The total attendance figure is based on that count and an estimate of the preceding years.

The center also announced that a major Bicentennial gift had been received from Japan: $3 million to finish a studio theater. The facility was in the center's original plans, but there was no money to complete it.

The plans will have to be revised; they originally called for a theater that could operate in the round or with a proscenium stage. "The machinery alone cost $1.5 million, so that's the first thing we cut," said Roger L. Stevens, the head of the center. Mr. Stevens hopes to use the new theater for experimental and intimate productions that would not be suitable in the center's bigger playhouse.

Italy Gives U.S. Small Portrait Of Jefferson

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7—Italy, which has sent sailing ships, the Medici Venus, and La Scala to the United States, gave a rare miniature portrait of Thomas Jefferson to Americans today, and this Bicentennial gift is for keeps.

Mrs. Giovanni Leone, wife of Italy's President, presented the portrait, which had been tucked away in a convent near Milan for the last 164 years, to Mr.s Ford at the White House. The portrait was recently on loan to the National Gallery of Art for a Jefferson exhibition.

The 3-by-1-inch Lodi miniature, so named for the tiny town where the convent is situated, had been one of the few remaining life portraits of Jefferson still in private hands. A National Gallery of Art official said few life studies of the founding father were "as marvelous" as this one because it represented the period when Jefferson, widowed, and minister to Paris, enjoyed an infatuation with a young Italian-born artist and beauty, Maria Cosway.

'Head and Heart' Letter

The miniature was painted for Mrs. Cosway in 1787 by John Trumbull, the American artist, then residing with Jefferson in Paris while completing his series on the American Revolution. Trumbull had introduced the diplomat to Mrs. Cosway and her English husband, also an artist, in 1786. The miniature is a replica of Trumbull's portrait of Jefferson in the Declaration of Independence.

The romance waned on Mr. Jefferson's part after he sent Mrs. Cosway his now famous "head and heart" letter in 1786, but the portrait remained in possession of its owner, who founded a teaching convent for girls in Lodi in 1812.

"Wish me joy," Mrs. Cosway had written earlier to Jefferson, "for I possess your picture."

About New York

The Bicentennial Question Mark for Business

By MURRAY SCHUMACH

"Can you tell if an extra sardine comes into a can?"

This was Sam Osman's way of trying to estimate if the city's mammoth Bicentennial celebration in July, which brought millions of persons downtown for Op-Sail and fireworks, has had any enduring influence on business for him, or for the area.

Mr. Osman, a vigorous, gray-haired man with staccato New York speech, is president of a congested discount place at Church and Warren Streets known as The Pushcart, which, he says, handles between 20,000 and 25,000 customers a day. On the paneled wall of his basement office is a yellow and black metal plate, the license that authorized him to sell from a pushcart in the Orchard Street market in 1936.

Mr. Osman is something of an expert on retail business in downtown Manhattan because before he combined four buildings into two sales floors and five floors of storage space 11 years ago, he was selling bargains in stores at Vesey and Greenwich Streets.

"No question," said Mr. Osman, between telephone calls in which he bargained briskly for huge lots of dishes, candy and electrical appliances from companies in need of cash, "that the Bicentennial brought lots of people to this area and that a lot of our business is word of mouth. But how much did it increase our business since then?

"Who can tell? For instance, we just bought a trailer of fans the other day, and then we got a heat wave. So who knows how many customers came just to get fans. And what if it turned cool. Would those customers be here?"

Even where the Bicentennial clearly increased business for retailers in downtown Manhattan, it often highlighted the unpredictability of consumer taste.

Sol Silberstein, manager of Merns, which deals in bargains in clothing, is still trying to figure out what happened with the Bicentennial ties and shirts stocked at his store, at Church and Vesey Streets.

"We had these ties and shirts with the American flag and 76," he said, "The ties we couldn't sell fast enough. A man would come in and buy a tie, and then he'd come back and buy a dozen more. One man bought 10 dozen. No wholesale rate. Each tie $3.90. The men were either giving the ties away or buying them for others as a favor.

"But the shirts. Nothing. We tried to sell them first for $7.90. No good. Bicentennial came and went. Eventually we came down to $1. And even then we had trouble. Maybe people think of a tie as a fun thing and a shirt is not a fun thing. I wish I knew the explanation. The truth is, a bomb is a bomb."

In the area of the South Street Seaport Museum, the merchants behave as though they will never recover from the memories of the Bicentennial boom.

At the Seaport Museum Book Store, at Fulton and Water Streets, where customers were flipping through pages of books and magazines about ships and sea, Abel Cruz, assistant manager, was still somewhat dazed from the Bicentennial.

"Those days of Op Sail were so tremendous," he said, "that we had to keep the doors wide open. It got so crowded here I had to keep people outside and not let them in until other people left. They bought books on how to fix boats. They bought charts. They wanted histories of sail. There was lots of money. Since then, not so much, of course."

In the dim clutter of Captain Hook's, at 10 Fulton Street, an employe said that "fantastic" was the only way to describe what the Bicentennial had done for business in marine antiques, seashells and assorted bric-a-brac dealing with ships and the sea.

He pointed to brass telegraph that once carried commands from a ship's wheelhouse to the engine room. So many customers have made the bells ring as they swung the lever from "ahead" to "astern" that the lever has been tied down.

At the large Hallmark store, at Pearl and Pine Streets, an employee, who asked to have his name withheld, was still baffled by Bicentennial.

"We stayed open on that Sunday, July 4," he said, "because we thought business would be so big. Lots of people came by. I never saw such crowds. But when they came in here, mainly what they wanted was film and postcards. They were not interested in gifts.

"Since then, if business has improved, it's not too noticeable. We always get a certain amount of tourists who visit the Wall Street area, so you can't tell how many of them are here because of the publicity of Op Sail."

Christos Sideris was standing outside his cab at a hack stand at Nassau Street and Exchange Place in the early afternoon. Two other cabs were in front of him, so he had time to talk. He had an unusual comment about the effect of the Bicentennial.

"I think the Bicentennial made tourists smart about how to save money in New York," he said. "They come to this area by sightseeing bus. Or else a few people staying at the same hotel will share a cab from the hotel. When they come downtown, they all seem how to know how to get back without taking a cab. I think they've learned about subways."

S.E.C. Suit Charges Investment Adviser Did Not Warn of Risk in the Mexican Peso

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7—The Securities and Exchange Commission charged today that an investment adviser had failed to disclose the possible risk of devaluation of the Mexican peso in inducing thousands of Americans to invest in high-yielding peso notes offered by the Mexican equivalent of savings and loan associations.

At the same time, the commission announced that it and Mexican financial authorities had reached an agreement under which a joint effort would be made to achieve compliance with the securities laws of both countries.

In light of the agreement, the S.E.C. said, it was removing from a restricted list the names of four Mexican financiers. They had been included on grounds their securities were not registered here and were thus sold illegally.

Suit Filed in Court

The S.E.C.'s charges were made in a suit filed in Federal District Court here against Mexletter-Mexican Business and investment service of Mexico City and Eugene C. Latham, the adviser's manager and principal owner.

The suit outlined a wide assortment of securities-law violations the commission said resulted in "fraud and deceit" upon the clients of Mexletter, described by officials as the largest merchandiser of Mexican deposits to United States investors.

The value of the peso has tumbled some 40 percent in the week since the Mexican Government decided to let its value be determined in the free market. Formerly fixed at 12.5 to the dollar, the peso was quoted yesterday at more than 20 to the dollar.

Americans stand to be heavy losers since they hold investments estimated at $6 billion to $8 billion in Mexican financieras, or savings and loans.

These instruments have been popular with retired people and others interested in maximum current income. The contracts typically call for 12 percent interest over periods of a year or two and the interest earnings are not reported by the institutions to the United States Government.

The S.E.C. said that since 1967, Mexletter advertised promissory notes, certificates of deposit and other securities of certain financieras in at least eight periodicals with broad distribution in the United States. Headlines such as "Money Grows Faster in Mexico" were frequently used.

Mexletter Charged Fee

Upon receiving instructions and a check, Mexletter bought the securities from a customer-designated financiera and received from it a fee amounting to one-quarter of 1 percent to one-half of 1 percent. Custody receipts are sent to the investor.

The S.E.C. charged that Mexletter, which is registered with it, falsely said the investments were risk free "when in fact there were numerous undisclosed risks."

It also said Mexletter solicitation material was falsely stated to have been passed upon by the commission and that the defendants said they were investment counsellors when in fact they acted merely as a "conduit."

Moreover, the S.E.C. said there was failure to disclose devaluation risks, the lack of an established trading market for the securities or that judgments against a financiera might be difficult to obtain or enforce.

The institutions removed from the restricted list are Credito Minero yMercantil, Financiera de Fomento Industrial, Financiera Comermex and Financiera Metropolitana. They were put on the list in April when the S.E.C."received information" that American investors were being solicited to buy unregistered securities.

Each of the four has agreed with both Mexican and United States authorities that it will not approach Americans.

The commission's suit today seeks permanent injunction against the violations it said Mexletter was commiting.

WARNER SIGNS PACT TO PURCHASE ATARI

Cash and Debenture Transaction Totals About $28 Million—Approvals of Deal Required

By CLARE M. RECKERT

Warner Communications signed a contract yesterday to acquire the privately owned Atari Inc. for cash and debentures. The total purchase price is approximately $28 million, according to Warner. Atari is a technological company that applies advanced semiconductor technology to consumer products. The company has invented an electronic paddle ball game and also produces coin-operated video games.

Merger News

Atari's revenues in the fiscal year ended last May 29 were about $39 million and net income was $3.5 million. The company was formed in 1972.

Warner Communications is engaged in the entertainment and communications businesses through operations in recorded music, music publishing, motion pictures, television, cable communications and the publishing and distribution of magazines and paperback books.

Completion of the contract is contingent on approval of the offer by the Commissioner of Corporations of California and acceptance by at least two-thirds of each class of the company's common and convertible preferred stock.

If the transaction is completed, all of the top management of Atari will continue under long-term contract and the company will be operated as a wholly owned subsidiary of Warner Communications. Atari, which operates three plants in California, is moving its headquarters, research and development units and two plants to Sunnyvale, Calif., where one plant is now situated.

NL Industries Plans Merger With Rucker Co.

NL Industries Inc. and the Rucker Company of Oakland, Calif., agreed to merge in an exchange of stock amounting to between $164 million and $165 million. Discussions between the two companies listed on the New York Stock Exchange were held from Friday until Monday in California, with final approval voted by both boards of directors.

Rucker is a diversified industrial company producing oil drilling equipment, while NL Industries, formerly known as National Lead, is in the metals, fabricated products and specialty chemicals business.

Under terms of the merger proposal, each share of Rucker common would be converted into $33 worth of NL common stock. Based on the 20¾ closing price of NL last Friday, the exchange ratio would be 1.59 shares of NL common for each Rucker common share. NL closed at 20⅛, off ⅝ point, while Rucker traded at a new high for the year of 28½, closing at 27¾, for a gain of 6¼ points.

The exchange ratio is subject to adjustment based on the average closing prices of NL common for the 20 trading days prior to the later of the shareholder meetings of the two companies, with a maximum of 1.66 shares and a minimum of 1.44 shares of NL common for each Rucker common share. The merger will be a tax-free reorganization for Federal income tax purposes.

Rucker has 4,257,000 common shares outstanding and an additional 981,000 common if the subordinated notes are converted, according to a company spokesman. Last year the company's net income was $16.9 million, or $3.93 a share, on sales of $161 million. The company would be operated as a separate unit within NL Industries continuing at its present location and staff. Clarence J. Woodard, chairman, and Edward M. Gibbs, president, would become directors of NL Industries.

NL Industries last year earned $45.6 million, or $1.89 a share, on sales of $1.3 billion.

Steel-Industry Shipments Trail Estimates, Bethlehem Discloses

Special to The New York Times

BETHELEM, Pa., Sept. 7—The head of the nation's second-largest steel-making corporations indicated in an interview here today that business spending for new plant and equipment had not increased so much as the steel industry had hoped.

Lewis W. Foy, chairman and chief executive officer of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, said the result had been lagging behind earlier estimates in the industry's orders and shipment for heavier steel products used by construction and equipment industries.

He reported that Bethlehem's third-quarter shipments and earnings were likely to be moderately below those of the second quarter this year, when the company reported a net income of $54.4 million, or $1.25 a share, on shipments of 3.6 million tons of steel products.

The company now estimates that the nation's mills will ship 95 million tons of steel products in 1976, up from 80 million tons last year. The industry's two biggest years were 1973 and 1974, when shipments were 109 million tons and 111 million tons, respectively.

Earlier this year, some industry executives felt that this year's steel shipments would run in a range between 97 million and 100 million tons.

"We had expected the capital-goods sector to show some real strength in the third quarter and increasing in the fourth quarter and into next year." Mr. Foy said. "But this has not happened. There has been some indication in the past few weeks that the capital-goods market is picking up very slightly. It will probably be late in the first quarter of next year and the second quarter before the industries affected feel any strong pick up—a delay of a half-year to a year."

Plant Losses Cited By Nuclear Fuel

Nuclear Fuel Services has disclosed that it is losing millions of dollars annually on its long-idle nuclear fuel reprocessing plant in West Valley, N.Y., near Buffalo. The company, a unit of the Getty Oil Company, said also that, even under the most optimistic circumstances, it expected that it would take a dozen years and more than $600 million of additional capital to bring the facility back into production.

The disclosures were made in a July 13 letter to an official of the Consumers Power Company of Jackson, Mich., from C. R. Moore, Nuclear Fuel's marketing manager. The nuclear concern has since introduced the letter into records of a law suit in Buffalo Federal Court where the Michigan utility is seeking to compel Nuclear Fuel to meet an October 1970 fuel-reprocessing contract. The suit was filed in February.

Mr. Moore noted in his letter that additional costs of reactivating the West Valley plant, projected to 1988, would make its contract price $1.1 millionametricton etaoi cmfwy etsao shr lion a metric ton, or 25 times the highest price in the 1970 contract. He commented that these and other "stark facts" made the plant "commercially impractical."

Exxon U.S.A. Confirms Metal Discoveries

The Exxon Company U.S.A., a unit of the Exxon Coporation, said that continued drilling at its previously announced metal discovery near Crandon, Wisc., had substantiated the presence of a large zinc and copper deposit. The company said that available information indicated a mineralized body of about 60 million tons lying between 200 and 1,675 feet below the surface.

It added that deposits average about 6.5 per cent zinc and 1 per cent copper along with much lower amounts of silver, gold and lead. While drilling is to continue through 1977, the company noted that results to date warrant preliminary studies of mining feasibility.

VW Sees Plant Pact

Volkswagenwerk AG. announced that it expected to reach agreement with Pennsylvania authorities this month that would allow the auto company to begin equipping its planned assembly plant at New Stanton, Pa. In making the announcement at the company's headquarters in Wolfsburg, West Germany, a spokesman said that the signing of the formal memorandum of closing was expected shortly after Sept. 15. A preliminary agreement was reached July 14.

Credit Letters At Abercrombie

Jeffrey Swaebe, acting chairman of the bankrupt Abercrombie & Fitch Company, disclosed that a major creditor of the retail chain, the First National Bank of Chicago, had agreed to provide letters of credit for every new order placed by the retail company.

The credit arrangement was disclosed in Federal Bankruptcy Court here. The presiding judge, Stanley T. Lesser, said he believed that such support from a major creditor was unprecedented. Abercrombie & Fitch filed for bankruptcy Aug. 9.

Public Stock Offering Set by BankAmerica

The BankAmerica Corporation, the bank holding company whose principal unit is the Bank of America, announced the registration with the Securities and Exchange Commission of a proposed public offering of 7 million shares of common stock. BankAmerica's common stock closed on the New York Stock Exchange yesterday at 53¾, down ¼.

In addition to 6.6 million shares to be offered in the United States, Britain and other countries, 400,000 will be offered concurrently in Japan. BankAmerica noted that the offering was the first by a United States issuer to be registered for concurrent offerings in both the United States and Japan.

The bulk of the offer will be handled by an international group represented by Blyth Eastman Dillon & Company; Merrill, Lynch, Fenner & Smith Inc.; Salomon Brothers and Dean Witter & Company. The offering in Japan will be made by a Japanese group represented by the Nomura Secuties Company Ltd.

Net proceeds of the sale will be added to the equity capital of th' Bank of America, the world's largest non-government bann which on June 30 had total assets exceeding $5 $66 billion.

Schaefer Corp. Suit Alleges Data Fraud

The F. & M. Schaefer Corporation said it had filed suit in United States District Court in New York against the Electronic Data Systems Corporation of Dallas for breach of contract, negligence and fraud in the design, implementation and operation of Schaefer's data-processing systems.

The New York company, which owns and operates the F. & M. Schaefer Brewing Company, is seeking $115 million in compensatory and punitive damages. Electronic Data Systems did not respond yesterday to a request for comment on the suit.

Farm Workers Return To Mushroom Facility

Castle & Cooke Inc., the major food concern, said that members of the United Farm Workers Union has resumed work at the Ventura, Calif., mushroom production facility of its West Foods subsidiary following the settlement Monday of a seven-day strike. This strike involved about 200 workers.

A two-year contract was ratified by the union , ending its national boycott of Dole products, chiefly pineapples and bananas, which are produced and marketed by Castle & Cooke.

MAPCO Discloses Plan Alterations

MAPCO Inc. of Tulsa, Okla., said that its planned development and commercialization of a new coal desulphurization process in partnership with the Battelle Memorial Institute research organization had been suspended and replaced with a broad agreement for possible cooperation on future opportunities for better utilization of coal.

The earlier plans, made last December, had provided for development of the Battelle hydrothermal coal process and included provision by MAPCO of one-third of $33 million of equity venture capital. Suspension of the plans, the Tulsa company said, was prompted by studies indicating that hydrothermally desulphurized coal might not be competitive and that further development was necessary to simplify the process.

MAPCO is an integrated energy and pollution-control company operating major liquefied petroleum gas and anhydrous ammonia pipelines.

Jersey Bell Offer Set

The New Jersey Bell Telephone Company said it planned to offer $100 million principal amount of 40-year debentures due Sept. 15, 2016, for competitive bidding about Sept. 21. Proceeds will be used for possible redemption of its $100 million issue of 40-year debentures due June 1, 2010.

United Airlines Took Million Overbookings in Y

By STEVEN RATTNER

Air travelers have long been simultaneously irritated and mystified by the airlines' apparent practice of overselling flights on the theory that many people with reservations do not show up. United Airlines may not have soothed its bumped passengers, but it has recently enlightened them.

In a letter to passengers published in the carrier's inflight magazine, Mainliner, United's president Richard J. Ferris disclosed that in the year ended June 30, 1976, more than a million reservations were taken beyond seating capacity, and 16,545 passengers holding confirmed reservations were turned back.

"To compensate for the no-show phenomenon, we deliberately confirm more reservations than there are aircraft seats on certain flights," Mr. Ferris wrote. "Ideally, no-shows balance out overbookings, which allows us to accommodate all passengers who really will take the flight and deny boarding to none."

The disclosure by United comes just a few months after the Civil Aeronautics Board announced that because of a sharp increase in airline overbooking, it was planning to investigate the practice. In the year ended June 30, 1975, 102,000 passengers were disallowed seats despite reservations, up from 94,000 the preceding year, the C. A. B. said.

In addition, Ralph Nader, the consumer advocate, recently won a round in the United State Supreme Court in his battle to extract $50,000 in damages from Allegheny Airlines, which bumped him from a flight in 1972.

Now, according to C. A. B. rules, any passenger bumped and not transported to his destination within two hours of the originally scheduled time is entitled to a penalty payment of $25 to $200, depending on the value of the ticket.

In his letter, Mr. Ferris said that of the 16,545 passengers that United bumped during the 12-month period, 5,828 arrived at their destinations within the two hours. Mr. Ferris also noted that United carried 30.35 million passengers in the period, bumping five one-hundredths of one percent of them.

United's release contained no information that the carriers are not required to report to the C.A.B. routinely. Other lines cite similar experience with denied boarding. American Airlines, for exapmle, last year bumped 16,400 travelers of the more than 20 million that it carried. The difference in the announcement by United was the distribution and the prominence that it was accorded.

United calculates that 10 to 15 percent of the travelers who reserve space will not use it. Other carriers report that on crowded flights, such as on Friday night, no-shows can range up to 50 percent.

"This practice constitutes an estimate, albeit a well-educated one, of the level of seating we can confirm without creating a denied-boarding problem" [Fer]ris wrote in the magazine. "[...] the results bear out the pract[ice ...] only acceptable but desirable."

Mr. Ferris maintained that if [...]ing were eliminated, other mo[...] measures would be needed to [...] problem.

"Airlines might be forced [...] passengers to pick up and pay [...] a day ahead of the flight," he [...] passengers might have to ch[...] least an hour before departure."

The future of the Italian economy remains clouded by uncertainties over Communist participation in the Government. As elsewhere in Western Europe, there was a sharp pickup in industrial activity in Italy early this year, which more recently has fizzled.

Since the June elections, in which both Communists and Christian Democrats increased their strength and worked out a temporary governing asrrangement, somewhat more confidence has been voiced on economic prospects. One sign: an unexpectedly high rate of capital reflows since the end of June.

Canada Will Relax Curbs on Earnings To Spur Investing

By ROBERT TRUMBULL
Special to The New York Times

OTTAWA, Sept. 7 — Finance Minister Donald S. MacDonald announced today that limits on company profits, enforced under the Government's anti-inflation program, would be relaxed slightly to encourage lagging investments.

A key step in the modified program permits companies a new investment credit if engaged in enterprises other than the distribution of products. A depressing effect upon new investment has been one of the principal complaints by businessmen against the anti-inflation plan inaugurated by Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau last October.

Under the new rules, a qualified company may deduct half the amount of new investments in Canada from profits deemed excessive under the former regulations, to a maximum of 10 percent of the permissible earnings.

This means that a company allowed to earn $1 million, for instance, could deduct only $100,000 as an investment credit against any excess above the allowed amount, regardless of the size of the investment.

Limits Relaxed

Another change relaxes the regulation that geared the limits on profits to a company's earnings record. Under the new requirements, companies will be allowed to earn at least 8 percent on equity, regardless of past performance.

Profits are still limited to 85 percent of the earnings in a base period, or 95 percent in the distribution industries. However, a company may now choose whether to base its compliance on average pre-tax earnings for the five years prior to the inauguration of the controls last Oct. 14, as previously required, or upon the most recent fiscal year ended prior to May 1, 1976.

The new alternatives in choosing a base period will allow many companies to raise their profit levels while still complying with the anti-inflation guidelines, Mr. MacDonald stated in his announcement of the new regulations.

Another key change removes a restriction on profits from sales of individual items in a line of products. Now the limit will apply to the overall earnings on an entire range of products, allowing higher margins on some items.

LANDING OF CONCORDE IN NEW YORK IS SEEN WITHIN 2 OR 3 MONTHS

By RICHARD WITKIN
Special to The New York Times

FARNBOROUGH, England, Sept. 7 — Approval for the Concorde supersonic airliner to land in New York is likely in the next two or three months, the head of the Federal Aviation Administration said here today.

The American official, Dr. John L. McLucas, also said his agency might join court action, if necessary, to remove the ban on Concorde landings at Kennedy International Airport.

But a spokesman for Transportation Secretary William T. Coleman Jr., under whom Dr. McLucas serves, said in Washington that the department had not changed its position that "this is a matter for local authorities."

"It is not the present intention of the department to join in the court action," he said in a telephone conversation after consulting with Mr. Coleman.

News Conference Held

The views of Dr. McLucas on the Concorde's prospects were given at a news conference here on the third day of the week-long Farnborough air show.

His remarks buoyed the spirits of the British and French partners in the Concorde program. They also tended to dispel any residual resentment at some comments the F.A.A. chief had made about his first Concorde flight earlier this year. He had thought the seats somewhat cramped, and the cabin too hot.

British Airways and Air France, which

The hope was expressed by Dr. McLucas today that the Port Authority, of New York in the light of its study of actual Concorde operations, would itself approve the plane's entry to New York. If not, he said, the courts could be expected to overrule the authority.

A spokesman for the Port Authority, when asked to comment on the remarks of Dr. McLucas, said officials of the Port Authority could not comment formally without knowing precisely what he had said.

Noise Levels Studied

However, the spokesman noted that tests of the Concorde's noise levels were being taken for the Port Authority at several airports under a six-month evaluation program that was previously announced.

The spokesman said the six-month period would end in late November, after which the test results would be evaluated. Pending the results, he said, "the Port Authority's position remains the same—the Concorde won't be operating out of Kennedy Airport."

When first asked if his agency would step into the court case, Dr. McLucas said flatly: "Yes, we'd be prepared to step in if necessary. But I hope it won't be necessary."

Later, he hedged a bit more, saying the F.A.A. would step in "if it would serve any purpose," and that he would "have to get a legal ruling"—apparently

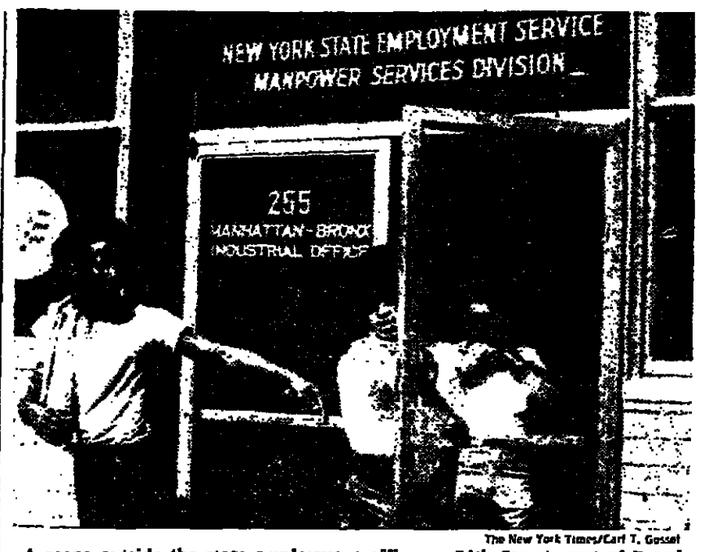
To Our Readers

The Business/Financial section of The Times begins today an expanded news report, including various new features, as well as a consolidated display of New York Stock Exchange and other tables.

Service columns on labor relations, commodities, taxes, technology, Washington activities, management and personal finance will appear Monday through Saturday. A new column, Economics of The Times, beginning Sept. 12, will be written on Sundays, Tuesdays and Fridays by Thomas E. Mullaney and on Thursdays by Leonard Silk.



The New York Times/Carl T. Gossel

A scene outside the state employment office on 54th Street west of Broadway. The nation's unemployment rate continues its climb.

Joblessness vs. Inflation

By LEONARD SILK

What is the major campaign issue—unemployment, inflation, or both?

The rise in unemployment in August for the third month in a row to a level of 7.9 percent is clearly worrying the Republican camp, since the President has put "jobs" at the head of his list of election issues. Mr. Ford, who had consistently named inflation as the No. 1 issue when he was fighting to get and keep conservative support, has begun to shift his focus to the employment issue. He has declared that "we will achieve that goal of full employment," which he does not define except by implication as a state in which "every American who wants to work has a meaningful and productive job." That presumably excludes persons who do not really want to work or the creation of public jobs that are not "meaningful and productive."

Economic Analysis

In the Democratic camp, a reverse shift is going on. Jimmy Carter, who had been putting unemployment at the head of the list of campaign issues as he sought the support of George Meany and other labor leaders, has been moving to reassure voters that he is not soft on inflation. Mr. Carter has told reporters that one of the biggest weaknesses he will face in his debates with Mr. Ford is the Republican charge that he is "irresponsible, a spendthrift and a liberal."

Apparently Mrs. Carter, a trusted adviser, has been insisting that her husband pay more attention to the charge that he would worsen inflation, and lately he has been stressing that he would phase in new Government spending programs carefully and would balance the budget by 1980.

Both candidates are thus showing every sign of listening more to the demands of the voters that both unemployment and inflation be attacked simultaneously—and less to the cautious and skeptical counsel of those economists who believe that a national policy maker must decide which is his first priority—stopping inflation or unemployment.

In shifting ground to embrace both issues in their political campaigns, the two candidates have instinctively reached

Stock Average Rises 7.48 Points; Rucker Up 6¼ as Kodak Gains 2⅜

By ALEXANDER R. HAMMER

The stock market, after some early hesitation, closed higher yesterday, aided by strength in blue-chip, gold and electronic issues.

The Dow Jones industrial average, off 0.41 point at noon, ended the day up 7.48 points at 996.59. In the last six sessions, the average has risen 32.66 points.

Analysts said that the momentum from last week's strong performance undoubtedly had brought more investors and traders in from the sidelines.

Turnover on the New York Stock Exchange increased to 16.31 million shares from 11.04 million shares on Friday. The market was closed Monday because of the Labor Day holiday.

Consolidated trading of stocks listed on the exchange rose to 19.03 million shares from 15.91 million shares Friday.

Rucker Soars 6¼

The volume leader and biggest gainer yesterday was the Rucker Company, which soared 6¼ points to 27¾ on a turnover of 334,600 shares, including an opening block of 70,000 shares at 28½.

Rucker and NL Industries announced a merger plan under which $33 worth of NL common stock would be exchanged for each Rucker share. Rucker did not trade on Friday following news Thursday that NL planned to make a tender offer for some of Rucker's shares. Rucker makes equipment for the drilling and completion of oil and gas wells. NL Industries, formerly National Lead, finished off ½ at 20¼.

The early weakness in the market was attributed to the Commerce Department's report that although its July-August sur-

Bank Held Partly By Arabs Buys 10% Of Reynolds Firm

By ROBERT J. COLE

A Paris-based investment bank partly owned by Arab interests has purchased a nearly 10 percent stake in Reynolds Securities International, the Big Wall Street brokerage firm said yesterday.

It identified the purchaser as Banque Arabe et Internationale d'Investissement. 50 percent owned by Arab institutions, including the Government of Abu Dhabi and the Kuwait Investment Company. The other 50 percent is owned by major international banks, including the Bank of America, Dresdner Bank of West Germany and Barclays Bank.

The transaction, involving $6 million, is the first public disclosure of Arab money invested in an American brokerage house.

It was the second foreign investment in a leading American securities firm in less than a week. Last Friday Cie. Bruxelles Lambert of Belgium reached an agreement to acquire an 11 percent interest, for about $7 million, in Drexel Burnham & Company. The deal called for the firm to become known as Drexel Burnham Lambert Group.

An Investment, Chairman Says

Yves Truffert, chairman of Banque Arabe, said the bank had purchased the minority interest as an investment. Mr. Truffert is a former chairman of the French-American Banking Corporation in New York.

Moving quickly to assure what it called its "substantial" number of Jewish employees, shareholders and customers, Reynolds announced that it "would not tolerate any boycott philosophy or action in any aspect of its business."

Reynolds said that the Arab bank had purchased 500,000 shares of company stock on Sept. 1 at $12 a share from a group of individual shareholders. It said that the main sellers were Thomas F. Staley and John D. Baker, who retired two years ago as board chairman and vice chairman, respectively. Other sellers were identified only as members of Mr. Staley's family and other retired officers.

Management rejected any suggestion that the sale might represent the first in a series to relinquish control to foreign interests. Original shareholders of Reynolds—described as active company employees—own about 50 percent of the 5,060,000 shares

FORD HOPES TO GAIN FROM G.M.'S DECISION TO REDUCE MODELS

MARKET FOR BIG CARS IS CITED

Introduction of '77 Lineup Shows Many Designs Essentially the Same as Last Year's

Special to The New York Times

DETROIT, Sept. 7 —The Ford Motor Company today introduced a 1977 model lineup that is essentially the same size and weight as last year's because, the company said, there is still a market for big cars as they have been built.

Ford officials, in fact, said they expected to capitalize on a decision by the General Motors Corporation to reduce its regular-sized cars by a foot and 700 pounds.

"We haven't taken one inch or one pound from this car," a Ford official asserted as he showed off a 1977 Lincoln that was 19 feet 5 inches long and weighed 5,007 pounds.

And the new Continental Mark V is actually two inches longer than the Mark IV it replaces. Lee A. Iacocca president of Ford, said the company had spent $120 million to change the design. But only a few hundred pounds of weight was saved and this by using a smaller engine.

"Welcome to the home of the Whopper —we sell the biggest ones in town and are proud of it," said Bennett E. Bidwell, sales group vice president at Ford.

Fuel Economy Factor

"Government standards may ultimately doom the full-sized car, but we hope to defer that eventuality as long as the customer is voting for it in the marketplace," said William O. Bourke, executive vice president at Ford.

Mr. Bidwell said, "Our sales strategy for 1977 will be approximately what it has always been"—with cars in all sizes and weight classes.

The officials, at a news conference in Ford's engineering center in suburban Dearborn, admitted the difference between G.M. and Ford cards would be greater in 1977 than ever before.

Mr. Bidwell said: "There will be two big elections this fall—each, ironically, with a Ford in it. The fact is that the automotive election is at least as uncertain as the other one."

Mr. Bourke said, "There will be the clearest choice of products in 50 years" in the industry.

But he also confirmed that Ford "will bring out a new smaller luxury car early next year called the Lincoln Versailles."

But for this fall, the only "downsizing" at Ford is the Thunderbird, formerly built from the Continental body shell. It is going to be a variation of the lighter intermediate body shell in 1977. Thus, its weight is down 870 pounds and the price will be cut $2,600," according to Mr. Bidwell.

The company also made some design changes to its intermediate cars and changed their names from Ford Torino to LTD 2 and from Mercury Montego to Cougar.

G.M. officials have maintained they have cut the size and weight of their regular cars in order to improve their fuel economy. Their regular cars will get two to three miles per gallon better economy.

Overall, G.M. is claiming an average 18.3 miles per gallon on its 1977 models, up 10 percent or 1.7 m.p.g. from this year's 16.6 m.p.g.

Ford officials maintain that the fuel economy difference in the full-sized cars is not that important to these buyers. Mr. Bourke said a difference of one m.p.g. equalled "a very modest $30 a year, and that much or even a good deal more doesn't excite the full-size car owners." "But downsizing shoulder and hip room by critical inches does."

G.M. officials say the interiors of their new cars are as roomy as before although some dimensions are down. And they say mileage will be important.

Ford officials conceded their 1977 models would average about 17.1 m.p.g., up only 0.2 m.p.g. from the 16.9 m.p.g. figure for 1976.

A fuel economy law will require that each company adjust its model mix to achieve an 18 m.p.g. average in the 1978 model year. This is increased to 20 m.p.g. in 1980 with the goal of 27.5 m.p.g. by 1985.

While G.M. is at the 1978 level in 1977, Ford isn't. If the law were in effect now, Ford would have to make fewer big cars and more small ones to raise its average to 18 m.p.g.

Low-Cost Lens for Available Light

By VICTOR K. McELHENY

Dim light has long created problems for amateur photographers who want to take candid color shots at parties or of their children opening presents at Christmas.

Although there are increasingly convenient arrays of flashbulbs and flash attachments for mass-market cameras, the photographer who uses them must observe certain disciplines—focusing carefully, avoiding eye-level shots that make the subject's eyes glow red and staying away from highly reflective backgrounds.

Could the photographic companies develop a color camera, the home photographers wondered, perhaps as compact as the Eastman Kodak pocket Instamatic, with a powerful lens to gather dim light, and a film considerably more sensitive—that is, faster—than Kodak's high-speed Ektachrome?

Walter Fallon, Kodak's president, told securities analysts in Atlanta last year, "Putting these features together presents a problem a lot like squaring the circle."

He told them that Kodak laboratory workers already had developed "something like" a film that would work well in many light conditions, including levels of light that inhibit today's snapshooter."

Industry observers were inclined to believe him, because available light color film for movie cameras was introduced in 1971 with an ASA speed

Leslie Report Sends Soybeans and Corn Upon Chicago Board

CHICAGO, Sept. 7 (AP) —After an estimate by a private crop analyst that there would be less corn and soybeans produced this year than the Government had forecast, several commodity futures advanced the permissible daily limit on the Chicago Board of Trade today.

Soybeans advanced 20 cents a bushel, soybean meal $10 a ton, soybean oil 100 points, corn 10 cents and oats 6 cents—all limits. Wheat futures closed 11 cents a bushel higher, far short of the 20-cent limit.

Conrad Leslie, an agricultural statistician and crop analyst, estimated as of Sept. 1 that the corn crop would total 5.98 billion bushels and soybeans 1.25 billion bushels. The soybean figure was 18 percent under 1975 production. Last month, the Agriculture Department estimated the corn crop at 6.19 billion bushels and soybeans at 1.34 billion bushels. High temperatures in August and not enough rain were blamed for the crop loss.

Trade was active and hectic the first few minutes as soybeans opened at limits higher in all six options. Within 15 minutes, there were orders to buy an estimated 10 million bushels of soybeans but there were no sellers. Later, meal, oil, oats and corn became locked at higher levels. At the close, there were an estimated 12 million bushels of soybeans on purchase, but no sellers. As corn prices rode to limits, new crop highs were set.

Wheat trading was fairly active and mixed throughout the session, and prices dropped a couple of cents from their highs at the final bell.

Rucker Provides a Bit of Inspiration

By RICHARD PHALON

Some securities analysts began recommending the Rucker Company, a major producer of such oil company goods as drill bits and blowout preventers, as a turnaround industry more than a year and a half ago.

For most of that period, the description seemed to have fallen on deaf investment ears. The price of the stock moved pretty much sidewise, despite the plausibility of a thesis that saw Rucker as undervalued—both in terms of its own rising earnings curve and price run-ups in such better-known competitors as Hughes Tool and Schlumberger.

Yesterday, however, in that most pragmatic of all crucibles—the Stock Market—the assessment of Rucker as undervalued turned out to be a real bit of inspiration.

The announcement that NL Industries, the old National Lead Company, and Rucker had agreed in principle to a merger that could bring Rucker shareholders as much as $33 a share worth of NL stock touched off a small celebration in the marketplace.

Rucker closed at 27¾, for a gain of 6¼ points, on a big upsurge in trading volume that made it the day's most actively traded stock.

The close was the highest price at which Rucker has traded since 1969, when securities analysts were talking about the company's bright future as a conglomerate.

Like many other conglomerates put together in the 60's Rucker marched up the hill only to march down again. A string of shaky earnings years turned into outright deficits between 1970 and 1972.

Management, presuaded that small might be beautiful after all, began shucking off its electrical safety and avionics controls business to concentrate on where it thought the money was—oil.

The correctness of that judgment soon began to show on the income sheet. Thanks to oil shortages and the big rise in exploration, demand for the drilling valves, regulators and other oil company goods that are Rucker's stock in trade rose apace.

Between 1973 and last year, the company's sales rose from $85.4 million to $161.2 million, and earnings expanded even more rapidly—from $2.3 million to almost $17 million, a turnaround situation, indeed.

NL Industries, on the other hand, was having its problems. Last year NL grossed $1.3 billion—eight times Rucker's sales—but earned $45.6 million, less than three times that o[f] ar company it hopes to acqu[ire].

Locked into a compara[tively] profit line of industrial ch[emicals], metals, NL has been whip[sawed] sharp drop in zinc prices a[nd] decided to get out of the zi[nc] resale business entirely.

compare our evening courses for quality and cost:

Each of our courses is taught by an executive, often a recognized leader in his field, who supervises that same activity at a leading investment firm or metropolitan bank. Thus our courses are practical, up-to-date, and pertinent—should help you immediately on your job.

It also means our tuition fees don't need to cover other faculty activities, such as research and publishing. You pay only for the cost of teaching you.

Courses include:
Accounting
Cost Accounting
The Options Markets
Advanced Options Strategies
Business Law
Options Operations
Margin Operations
Taxation
Liability Management/Money Market
Corporate Money Management
Security Analysis
Technical Analysis
U.S. Government Securities and many others

Classes begin Mon., Sept. 20. So telephone today. Ask for Andrew Morse. He'll be glad to answer any questions you may have — and to send you a free class schedule so you can compare courses and fees at your convenience. The number is (212) 344-2900.

MISSOURI PACIFIC CORPORATION
(Formerly Mississippi River Corporation)
St. Louis, Missouri

A quarterly dividend of 40¢ per share has been declared on the Common Stock of the Company, payable on September 30, 1976 to holders of record at the close of business on September 13, 1976.

This represents an increase of 5¢ over the Company's previous quarterly dividend rate, or an increase in the annual dividend rate from $1.40 to $1.60 per share and is the second dividend increase made in 1976.

Sucrest Asks Stock Trading Halt; Says It Can't Meet Report Deadline

By H. J. MAIDENBERG

The Sucrest Corporation, one of the largest sugar refiners in the nation, asked that its stock be suspended from trading by the New York Stock Exchange yesterday because it could not meet a deadline for filing its annual report for the year ended last May 29 with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Robert M. Rapaport, president of Sucrest, said in a statement that the annual report and related data were being delayed so independent auditors could examine "certain company transactions."

Although these examinations were not expected to "have a materially adverse effect upon the financial condition of the company," Mr. Rapaport asked the S.E.C. and Big Board to suspend its stock until the audit was completed and the annual statement filed.

Last week, Sucrest's common closed at $8 a share, down ⅜ for the week. Its range this year was 6⅛ to 11¼.

Mr. Rapaport's statement also said that Robert Simons, who had been a director for many years, had been elected vice chairman and chief financial officer of Sucrest.

Further, Sucrest's president said that Allerton D. Marshall, who had been chief financial officer, would stay on as vice president, secretary and treasurer of the company. The post of vice chairman is a new position.

Officers of Sucrest declined to amplify their statement or give any reasons for the changes in management. Nor would they give any explanation for the audits, which include operations for fiscal 1975 as well.

However, some knowledgeable sources in the sugar trade noted that the sharp rise in New York raw sugar cash prices from about 12.5 cents a pound in mid-1974 to the record of 57 cents in November of that year and the subsequent plummet to around 8 cents yesterday might be responsible.

"When you get such sharp movements," one broker observed yesterday, "valuing inventories, costs and the like become highly complex. It must raise questions of accounting measures used.

"While I'm not privy to Sucrest's problem, it wouldn't surprise me if questions had arisen about the company's accounting methods."

After these observations were read to Mr. Rapaport over the telephone, Sucrest's president would comment only that he could not expand on his original statement at this time. "I would like to say more but I can't," he added.

Gold Price Off in Europe On Wave of Profit Taking; Dollar Is Mostly Steady

LONDON, Sept. 7 (AP) —The price of gold fell on major European bullion markets today in a wave of profit taking after yesterday's sharp rise, but it remained well above Friday's levels. The United States dollar held steady in most foreign exchanges.

Gold dropped $5 an ounce in London to $110.50 an ounce and $1.50 in Zurich to $112. These prices were still above Friday's $107.25 in London and $107.375 in Zurich.

The dollar closed virtually unchanged in Frankfurt at 2.5225 West German marks and in Zurich at 2.4808 Swiss francs. In Paris, it eased from 4.92675 French francs to 4.9250, in Amsterdam from 2.6335 guilders to 2.6315 and in Milan from 841.05 lire to 840.75.

A threatened national strike of merchant seamen depressed the British pound at the opening, but what dealers described as "heavy support" by the Bank of England steadied the rate, and sterling closed at $1.77125, down only slightly from $1.7730.

The seamen voted by a narrow margin yesterday to authorize their union officials to call a strike in support of a wage claim.

King Is Sentenced to One Year For Defrauding I.O.S. Holders

John McCandish King, former chairman and chief executive officer of the King Resources Company of Denver, was sentenced yesterday to one year in prison after being convicted on fraud and conspiracy charges.

Mr. King's associate and co-defendant, A. Rowland Boucher, formerly president of King Resources, was sentenced to seven months in jail.

On July 2, 1976, Mr. King and Mr. Boucher were found guilty on four counts of fraud and conspiracy after a six-week jury trial. Mr. King and Mr. Boucher were charged with a complicated scheme to defraud 150,000 shareholders of the I.O.S. Funds of Funds in connection with fraudulent valuations of certain Arctic oil and gas permits.

Mr. King and Mr. Boucher, according to the indictment, arranged for fraudulent sales of a small percentage of Arctic property "utilizing secret inducements and guarantees that were deliberately concealed from the Fund of Funds and its auditors."

The King Resources Company, now bankrupt, was formed in 1960 by Mr. King in Denver to carry out oil and gas exploration and development. The company used computers to make geological surveys and soon gained a reputation for cutting exploration costs.

way of business capital spending plans for 1976 was up 7.4 percent from the 1975 period, last year, the plans were about unchanged from what businesses were planning in the April-May survey.

Donald W. Kimsey, technical analyst of Dean Witter & Company, said that the market continued to follow through on its recent strength and thereby was in keeping with the seasonal pattern and "well within the normal expectations developed over the last several years."

Mr. Kimsey said that the preceding six months of consolidation this year had laid the necessary groundwork of skeptical opinion "which will ultimately lead to the extension of the major uptrend."

Gary Wollin, director of institutional research of Muller & Company, said that long-term factors such as the declining rate of inflation and lower short-term interest rates "continue to contribute to the recent bullish sentiment."

New Highs Seen

Mr. Wollin suggested that the market appeared to act "as if record new highs will be reached during this current upward move."

Another Wall Streeter added that the post-Labor Day period was often a time of reassessment and reinvestment by traders who were relatively inactive during the summer.

Among the stronger blue chips yesterday were Eastern Kodak, which rose 2⅜ to 97⅞; Du Pont, 1¾ to 134; Sears, Roebuck, 1¼ to 70; F. W. Woolworth, 1⅛ to 24⅜, and Monsanto Chemical, 1⅞ to 90 ⅛. The strength is Sears reflected a statement yesterday by Arthur M. Wood, chairman, that he saw "continuing steady sales growth" at least through the spring of 1977.

Although bullion prices abroad gave up some of their sharp gains made Monday, the gold-mining issues traded here finished higher. ASA rose ½ to 16¼; Campbell Red Lake Mines, ¾ to 19; Dome Mines, ¾ to 37⅜, and Homestake Mining, 1⅞ to 29¾.

Most of the electronic and office-equipment issues posted sizable gains. Texas Instruments was up 2 to 113½; Hewlett-Packard, 1½ to 90 ¾; Burroughs, 1¼ to 94; Raytheon, 1¼ to 62¼; Digital Equipment, 5⅛ to 169⅞; National Semiconductor, 1 to 36⅝; International Business Machines, 1½ to 280 and Data General, 2⅝ to 51.

Teledyne, also in the electronic group, climbed 3 to 73. Last week, Curtiss-Wright said that units of Teledyne had increased their holdings in Curtiss-Wright to about 12 percent of the outstanding shares from the previously held 8 percent. Curtiss-Wright fell ¼ to 16¼.

Standard of Ohio Off

Standard Oil (Ohio) fell 1½ to 68½ while Atlantic-Richfield slipped ¼ to 101½. The weakness in the two issues was attributed to delays in construction of the Alaskan Pipeline due to faulty welding and political problems both at the state and Federal level.

Bethlehem Steel added ¾ to 43. After the market closed, the steel producer said that earnings for the third quarter would not match the second-quarter results of $1.25 a share.

Getty Oil advanced a point to 179 despite news that one of its subsidiaries was losing millions of dollars a year on its long-idle nuclear-fuel-reprocessing plant in West Valley, N.Y.

Another gainer was Reynolds Securities, which rose ½ to 11⅜. An Arab dominated investment company bought a 10 percent interest in Reynolds Securities International, parent of Reynolds Securities.

On the downside, Ponderosa System fell a point to 7⅛ after trading at a 1976 low of 7⅛. The fast-food chain reported that earnings for the quarter ended Aug. 12 fell to 24 cents a share from 30 cents a share a year earlier.

The American Stock Exchange and the over-the-counter market yesterday posted their seventh consecutive advances in stepped-up trading. The price of an average share gained 7 cents. Turnover climbed to 1.75 million shares from 1.45 million shares on Friday.

Incoterm A stock advanced 1¼ to 10 ⅝. The computer software manufacturer said it had received a contract for more than $3.3 million from a Swedish company.

Frigitronics topped the active list and dipped ⅛ to 12⅜ on a turnover of 76,900 shares. The eyeglass-lens maker made a special offering of 86,600 shares at $12.50 a share.

Syntex, the second most heavily traded issue, gained ⅞ to 25⅞ after the pharmaceutical concern reported that its fourth-quarter operating net rose to 57 cents a share from 44 cents a share a year earlier.

Resisting the upward trend, Risdon Manufacturing lost ⅜ to 17¾. The cosmetics company announced it had signed an agreement to purchase the Franklin Brush Company of Laconia, N. H.

A total of 32,476 options contracts traded on the Amex yesterday against Friday's 21,115. On the Chicago Board Options Exchange, 71,179 contracts changed hands, compared with 43,728 Friday.

In the counter market, the NASDAQ industrial index climbed 0.12 to 94.59 while the composite index gained 0.19 to 91.21. Turnover expanded to 4.88 million shares from 4.81 million shares Friday.

High-Yield Wheat and Acreage Continues to Rise

According to the chief scorekeeper, Dana G. Dalrymple of the Economic Research Service of the Department of Agriculture, the "Green Revolution" has plenty of life in it.

Acreage devoted to high-yielding varieties of wheat and rice in developing nations of the Near East and Asia continued to rise in the crop years 1973-74 and 1974-75, Mr. Dalrymple says.

Those were the years when fertilizer prices soared along with oil prices. This was expected to cripple the ability of farmers to buy the fertilizers needed to help the short-strawed wheat and rice plants reach the production potential that scientists had given them.

According to Foreign Agricultural Economic Report No. 95, the fifth edition of Mr. Dalrymple's series, high-yielding wheat acreage reached 47.6 million in 1974-75 (less than a decade after introduction), and the corresponding figure for rice was 53.3 million.

By 1975, new wheat varieties covered 38.4 percent of the total Near East and Asian wheat area, and the new rices occupied 26 percent of the rice lands.

In the two crop years ended in 1975, high-yielding wheat acreage rose 10 and 6 percent respectively, while high-yielding rice acreage went up 27 and 9 percent. The fertilizer price squeeze apparently slowed but did not stop the Green Revolution.

STEEL OUTPUT OFF 0.6% FROM WEEK-AGO LEVEL

Steel production for the week ended Sept. 4 fell to its lowest level since the week ended last Feb. 28, when 2.46 million tons of raw steel were poured and the production capability level stood at 82.3 percent.

The American Iron and Steel Institute said yesterday that production for the most recent week was only 2.47 million tons and a capability utilization level of 81.2 percent. This was 0.6 percent lower than the 2.48 million tons poured a week earlier when the index stood at 81.7 percent.

The trade associaton blamed the production decline on a slow-down in orders from the automotive and appliance industries. "We don't know if this is a temporary lull," said one spokesman for the association, "or if it will continue into the fourth quarter."

While everyone's telling you "the check's in the mail," we can put the money in your pocket.

The sad fact of the matter is, that just when your business needs the money most, your customer's check probably hasn't even been written yet.

Or that just at the moment your business needs cash on hand, most of its cash is tied up on the shelves. In inventory.

Marine Midland bankers understand these common business problems. And they have a wealth of experience in tailor-making Inventory or Accounts Receivable Loans to solve them.

We can tailor Growth Financing for you, as well — if your business is going places but lacks the ready cash to get there.

In fact, whatever your business credit needs are, we can give you the depth of lending talent and expertise, the sort of involvement with your business, that your business deserves.

Come in and talk with a Marine Midland banker, at any of our more than 300 New York State branches. (That's more than any other bank in the state.)

You'll find the answers to a lot of business problems are right around your corner.

In New York City, telephone, John D. McCormick, Senior Vice President, Commercial Finance Division at (212) 983-8380.

On Long Island, telephone Pete Ruberti, Assistant Vice President, Commercial Finance Division at (516) 752-4390.

In Southeastern New York, telephone Bill Van, Commercial Finance Officer, Commercial Finance Division at (914) 358-6300.

MARINE MIDLAND BANK
THE BANK THAT'S CLOSER TO YOUR BUSINESS.

Discover the NON-BANK ACCOUNT

Dreyfus Liquid Assets gives you free checks plus daily dividends.

The new Dreyfus Intermediate Bond Fund gives you free checks plus the opportunity for better yields.

Before you put your money into a non-interest checking account, get the facts about a "Non-Bank Account." Many people who have money which must be kept available have discovered this different way, which gives you both the convenience of free check-writing and the financial benefit of daily dividends or better income.

Dreyfus Liquid Assets pools the money of thousands of investors to buy short term low-risk high-yield money market instruments, which usually pay higher rates of interest than those offered by savings accounts but are frequently beyond the means of the average investor. Shareholders are credited with dividends daily.

The Dreyfus Intermediate Bond Fund was created for the longer-term investor who knows the value of carefully selected high-grade medium term corporate bonds and government securities, but still wants liquidity. 80% of the portfolio is invested in 4 to 7 year maturities.

With BOTH these funds, your investment is totally liquid. You can withdraw money at any time simply by writing a check for $500 or more, which you may deposit in your bank or use for direct payment of a large bill. The amount withdrawn continues to earn income until the check clears. We send you your cancelled checks and quarterly statement.

There is no charge when you buy shares, no charge for the checks and no monthly maintenance charge. You may open an account for as little as $2,500.

So find out more about the "Non-Bank" way with Dreyfus Liquid Assets and Dreyfus Intermediate Bond Fund. For a copy of the prospectus and a free information booklet, mail the coupon.

...rs instinctively rejected the ...the only way to hold prices down is to keep large numbers of our citizens out of work, or the idea that if job opportunities are made plentiful for all Americans who want to work, prices have to go berserk."

Many Democratic economists think that the high priority given by the Ford Administration to fighting inflation by restrictive monetary and fiscal policies has needlessly prolonged unemployment at levels far above the 4½ to 5½ percent level at which inflation might be expected to heat up. President Ford's budget for the 1977 fiscal year, submitted last January, forecast 7.7 percent unemployment in 1976 and 6.9 percent unemployment in 1977.

This is proving to be one of the best unemployment forecasts ever issued by an Administration, whatever the dire consequences for the President's political fortunes. At present, with the jobless rate back up to 7.9 percent, unemployment for the first eight months of 1976 has averaged 7.6 percent.

The main criticism that many professional economists raise about the preference of ordinary voters for Option C, the simultaneous attack on both inflation and unemployment, is that nobody knows how to deliver it.

Voters Appear More Pragmatic

The Public Agenda study suggests that the voters are simply more pragmatic and less ideological than the economists. If Government intervention works, they will favor it; if letting market forces operate works, they will favor that. They care about the ends, not the means, and they refuse to give ground on according a priority to inflation over unemployment, or vice versa.

And it is this demand to which Mr. Carter and Mr. Ford are now responding.

But are they offering pie in the sky?

This is far from clear, despite the skepticism of many economists about Option C.

Otto Eckstein, the president of Data Resources Inc., who served as a member of President John F. Kennedy's Council of Economic Advisers, has tested various policy courses with his elaborate econometric model. He finds that, with economic policies not too different from those of the last couple of years, unemployment will not get down below 6 percent until 1980, and that the inflation rate would show some mild acceleration to 1978, and then show a gradual improvement.

But the average annual inflationary rate for the next four years would still be 5.4 percent, and in 1980 inflation would still be 5 percent.

When Mr. Eckstein ran his econometric model on the assumption of a much faster pace for monetary and fiscal stimulus, he got the unemployment rate down to 4.1 percent in 1980, but the rate of inflation gradually climbed up to 7.3 percent by the end of the decade.

He then made different assumptions—ones that might correspond to Option C—in which selective policies were adopted to augment the capacity of basic industrial materials to accommodate a higher growth path, in which unemployment was lowered in ways other than pumping up total spending, and in which lower unemployment was accompanied by measures to prevent a wage explosion.

Lo and behold, this "policy focus" model gave better results than either of the above two: Unemployment was brought down to 4.1 percent by 1980 and the inflation rate—though still unsatisfactory—was held to 5.6 percent, or not significantly worse than a slow-growth, relatively high unemployment path similar to the Ford Administration's.

But the problem is whether the specific measures needed simultaneously to reduce "structural" unemployment and check wage and price explosions are actually available, and whether the next Administration would know how to design them, and would gain the necessary cooperation of labor and management. Success in the past with either manpower programs or incomes policies has not been conspicuous, which is what makes the economists so skeptical.

Yet the voters are insistent that the next President promise to slay the twin dragons of inflation and unemployment, and both political parties are responding.

Transport Authority Votes Offer to Rock Island Lines

CHICAGO, Sept. 7 (UPI)—The Regional Transportation Authority board today voted to offer $7.5 million to the bankrupt Rock Island Lines in a purchase-of-service agreement.

But Rock Island trustee William Gibbons said he may recommend that Frank McGarr reject the offer because some of the money is earmarked for repairs he thinks the authority should pay.

Judge McGarr, overseeing Rock Island operations since the line declared bankruptcy last year, has appointed Mr. Gibbons to take steps to put the railroad back on its feet.

The proposed transportation authority contract would give the Rock Island $1.6 million for its fiscal 1976 deficit and $5.9 million for a one-year purchase-of-service agreement ending June 30, 1977.

Today, 3,000,000 Mexicans earn their living from tourism

During the last six years Mexico has opened — for the enjoyment of tourists from Mexico and the whole world — fascinating new tourist complexes such as Cancún, Ixtapa-Zihuatanejo, Puerto Escondido, Bahía de Banderas and Cumbres del Llano.

To visit "Mexico Today and Tomorrow" is to learn about the infrastructure and the projects which have made it possible to bring tourism to a wide variety of different areas throughout Mexico, carefully chosen for their location, superb climate, local color and great natural beauty.

To visit "Mexico Today and Tomorrow" is to understand how, today, 3,000,000 Mexicans earn their living from tourism.

All that we have achieved during the last six years has not only been for us, the citizens of Mexico in 1976, but is also the basis for the future well-being of our children.

Following, reprinted in full, is the text of the joint communique issued by the Israel-U.S. Business Council at the conclusion of its inaugural meeting in Jerusalem. The Council, whose membership comprises a cross section of business leadership in Israel and the United States, is the private sector counterpart to the intergovernmental U.S.-Israel Joint Committee for Investment and Trade.

Inaugural Meeting
ISRAEL-U.S. BUSINESS COUNCIL

JOINT COMMUNIQUE

The Israel-U.S. Business Council held its inaugural meeting in Jerusalem June 7-9, 1976. The American delegation, led by The Honorable George W. Romney, chairman, National Center for Voluntary Action, comprised 20 senior executives representing a cross section of the American business community. The Israeli Section, consisting of 28 business leaders, was headed by Mark Mosevics, chairman of the board, Elite, Ltd.

The Council, formed at the request of the Israeli and U.S. Governments, is designed to serve as a private sector complement to the intergovernmental U.S.-Israel Joint Committee for Investment and Trade. Specifically, the Council serves as a catalyst for broader and closer bilateral business relations.

During this inaugural meeting, Council members were addressed by and met with high ranking Israeli officials, including Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, Commerce and Industry Minister Chaim Bar-Lev, and Finance Minister Yehushua Rabinowitz. U.S. Secretary of Commerce Elliot Richardson sent a special message to the Council. These officials emphasized the importance of expanding Israeli-American economic relations and stressed the key role that the Council can and should play in generating increased flows of trade and investment.

During the meeting, members of the two sections reviewed and discussed the current situations and outlooks for the Israeli and U.S. economies, the measures that both countries have and plan to take to curb inflation, restore balance of payments equilibrium, expand exports, increase productivity and, generally, restore business confidence by, among other things, stimulating the environment for investment.

Council members reviewed the notable increase in bilateral trade that has occurred over the past two years as a result of greater efforts by the two governments to improve the political and economic factors that bear directly on the environment for business growth. Also, they welcomed the increased interest of U.S. business in investment in the Middle East.

The Council recognized that much more needs to be done to intensify and streamline relations between the two countries, and the Council addressed practical ways in which the two business communities—separately and together with their governments—could assist in generating broader and deeper commercial contacts between the two countries.

Following these discussions, which were marked by a high degree of candor and openness, the two sections agreed to issue this joint statement which incorporates both the Council's principles and its program of action.

I. ECONOMIC COLLABORATION

The two sections agreed that a higher level of trade and investment between Israel and the United States is in the mutual interest of both countries. In this regard, the two sections agreed to collaborate closely on ways to encourage bilateral business activity, principally through:

1. an ongoing process of dialogue aimed at identifying obstacles to expanded business activity and developing solutions to them; and
2. action programs to optimize existing trade and investment potentials.

The Council emphasized the importance for the two countries of working closely together to create a global environment that will enable a freer international flow of goods, services, capital and people. In that connection, the Council members expressed their opposition to discriminatory practices in international economic relations based on race, religion or national origin. In furtherance of this position, the U.S. Section adopted the policy statement which follows this communique.

Specifically, the Council agreed to implement two recommendations:

1. Members of the two sections, on a continuing basis, will encourage and assist Israeli and American firms to explore business opportunities in both countries—especially the areas to which Israel gives high priority, including export industries, science-based industries, defense-related products, industrialization of construction, tourist facilities and recycling operations.
2. In tandem with its next meeting in the United States, the Council will sponsor one or more special workshops on business opportunities in Israel tailored specifically to attract new-to-market U.S. firms.

II. INVESTMENT CLIMATE

The Council discussed comprehensively Israel's investment climate, including the prospects for and the problems attendant to increasing foreign investment in Israel. The Council reviewed the initiatives that have been and are being undertaken by the business communities and governments in the two countries to stimulate investment activity and agreed that the following measures would enhance these efforts:

1. The Council urges that the U.S. Senate promptly consent to ratify the U.S.-Israel Income Tax Convention that the two governments signed on November 20, 1975. The Convention, which would avoid double taxation and prevent fiscal evasion, would have a positive impact on investment by either country. The U.S. Section stated it would convey the Council's agreement as a formal recommendation to the U.S. Senate.
2. The Council, after reviewing the main elements of the financial incentives for foreign investment now being considered by the Knesset, agreed that these measures should be enacted promptly to enhance the foreign investment climate in Israel. In addition, the Council urged that the proposed law include measures to neutralize the impact of devaluations and inflationary pressures on foreign investment.
3. Responding to presentations by the Israeli Section on the advantages Israel offers to foreign investors, the U.S. Section emphasized that Israel's industrial expansion program must stress the use of realistic and objective economic criteria in the conception and development of project proposals. In this connection, the Council agreed to establish a joint working group which will develop a conceptual framework for project development, incorporating typical expectations of an American investor in evaluating the feasibility and desirability of an investment opportunity in Israel.
4. The Council recommends that the Israeli Government retain a respected American consulting firm specializing in market analyses and investment to recommend ways in which Israel can improve its foreign investment potential.
5. Concurrently, the Council established a joint working group to review Israel's foreign investment incentive and promotion programs to ascertain ways in which both could be made more effective. Meantime, this working group stressed the need for an effective and coordinated system to process applications for foreign investment. In this connection, the Council recommended that:
   a. Further study should be undertaken of the various governmental steps required in the review, approval and implementation of investments by foreign firms in Israel.
   b. The final goal of such study shall be to centralize governmental authority relating to foreign investments in Israel so that there will be a speeding up of the approval and implementation process; the development of a "one-stop" service as far as practical and the elimination of so-called "red tape", wherever possible.
   c. The joint working group continue its discussions and submit additional recommendations at the next meeting of the Joint Executive Committee of the Council.

III. TRADE OPPORTUNITIES

The Council, noting that two-way trade in 1975 exceeded $1.8 billion, expressed confidence that improving world economic conditions, coupled with more vigorous export promotion programs by Israel and the availability of the U.S. Generalized System of Preferences should result in a higher trade turnover in 1976. In addition, the Israeli Section pointed out that Israel's comprehensive trade agreement with the European Community—which will gradually scale down customs duties and eventually establish a free trade area between them—offers advantageous opportunities for U.S. investment in Israel in export-oriented industries. The U.S. Section concurred that this agreement offers new investment possibilities and further agreed to spread the word of trade opportunities within the American business community through, among other vehicles, the Committee for the Economic Growth of Israel, which has been organized for the specific purpose of facilitating individual business contacts.

IV. RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT COOPERATION

The Council reviewed opportunities and incentives for industrial research and development in Israel.

The Council noted with satisfaction that the two countries have established a U.S.-Israel Industrial Research and Development Foundation and a U.S.-Israel Industrial Research and Development Council to foster technological cooperation between the two countries. The Council expressed its support for the work of these two bodies. Furthermore, the Council:

1. Recommended that the Foundation and the Council seek to identify specific ways in which Israel's research potential can be more fully realized. The Israeli side suggested such potential fields as: agricultural machinery, irrigation accessories, solar energy, water purification, mobile training centers, medical instrumentation, diagnostic systems and enzyme engineering.
2. Believes that one of Israel's most significant assets is its extensive pool of technical and scientific talent and the comparatively lower cost of high quality R & D (from one-sixth to one-half the cost in the United States). High technology-intensive U.S. companies should take advantage of this valuable resource. The Joint Business Council, the U.S.-Israel Industrial Research and Development Council, the Committee for the Economic Growth of Israel, and the Israel Investment Authority should use this unique leverage in promoting joint industrial efforts between the United States and Israel.

V. FUTURE WORK

The two sections of the Council concurred that the inaugural meeting had succeeded in creating a better understanding of the prospects for expanding bilateral business relations, that the discussions had served to clarify several key issues, and had produced an ambitious and promising program of work. They further agreed that the Joint Executive Committee of the Council should meet in Israel in early 1977. Meantime, the Council will begin immediately to implement the agreed-upon recommendations and the action program of the two joint working groups established by the Council.

ISRAEL-U.S. BUSINESS COUNCIL
POLICY STATEMENT OF THE U.S. SECTION ON THE ARAB BOYCOTT

The U.S. Section considers normalization of trade relations in the Middle East to be an essential step toward peace in that region. In furtherance of that goal, the U.S. Section believes American skills, technology and products are vital to the general economic development and well-being of all peoples in this area and constitute an important component of its long-term stability.

The U.S. Section encourages mutual trade between American firms and their counterparts in all Middle Eastern countries and believes, in this connection, that the Arab boycott is an artificial impediment and is contrary to America's traditional policy of free trade.

Therefore, the U.S. Section supports existing Federal law which states that it is the policy of the United States to oppose boycotts imposed against countries friendly to America and endorses the President's directive of November 20, 1975, prohibiting compliance with any acts imposed by a foreign country which discriminate against U.S. citizens or firms on the basis of race, religion, sex or national origin.

The U.S. Section urges the U.S. Government, in its contacts with representatives of Arab countries, to secure the elimination of their boycott of Israel.

The British Are Coming—on WOR-TV

By WILLIAM D. SMITH

The most ambitious invasion of American television to date began Labor Day and will end at about 3 o'clock Saturday morning.

The invader is, most fittingly in this Bicentennial year, the "old enemy," the British, in the form of Thames Television Ltd., the largest supplier of programs to Britain's single commercial television channel, ITV.

The collaborator, as all invasions must have, is WOR-TV, Channel 9.

It is a rather bold experiment not only in programming but also in advertising and promotion.

From 5:30 P.M. to closing time every day this week, Thames will provide almost all the material including advertising and news for Channel 9. The material will be largely reruns of successful shows Thames created and produced for British TV, with a smattering of original programs for the American market, particularly, live a magazine-type talk show carried by satellite and emanating from London and New York every day.

Thames has bought all the time for a "substantial amount, although we would really not like to say exactly how much," according to Muir Sutherland, chief executive of Thames International, an overseas sales subsidiary.

The purpose of Thames is threefold, according to Mr. Sutherland, a bustling Anglo-Scot who is the originator and chief mover behind the project.

The first purpose is to present the image of Thames as a quality producer of shows for the American market. "Quite often BBC [the Government-controlled British Broadcast Corporation] gets credit over in the States for successful shows we created such as 'World at War' and 'Jennny,'" he said.

"We are trying to reach the decision makers in the New York market, which is, after all, the world's largest commercial market," Mr. Sutherland added. "We are trying to show them our product on hope that advertisers will buy and viewers will view a slightly different product."

Thames's second objective is to celebrate the 20th anniversary of commercial television in Britain, where prior to 1956 television had been a Government monopoly.

The third goal, as in all commercial ventures was to make money. But in this regard Mr. Sutherland commented frankly, "If we break even in this venture we will be pleased." He added, "However, we have left plenty of room for a profit and would be very happy to turn one in."

Thames is running the ads in single long segments per half-hour as it would do on British commercial TV rather than the traditional shorter but more numerous ones in American method. Mr. Sutherland said he hoped that an interesting insight into viewer acceptability of ad interruptions might be gained from this project. "Would a chap prefer to have his chain of interest interupted once for a long period of time or on several occasions for shorter periods is a topic that may not really have been studied here," Mr. Sutherland commented.

Jim Shaw, director of sales and marketing for Thames International, sought advertisers in three broad categories — British manufacturers who want to build an image in the United States; the travel industry and traditional American advertisers.

The project has been able to attract all three groups with advertisers thus far, including major British manufacturers such as EMI Ltd. and British Leyland; travel sponsors such as Cunard Lines, British Airways, Air India, Trust House Forte, Europe's largest hotel and resturant chain and American advertisers such as the Chrysler Corporation, Eastern Airlines, the New York Telephone Company and the General Foods Corporation.

The logo for Thames shows on TV here

Mr. Sutherland said: "Of course we can't be sure that the New York public will like what we show, but we believe that there is a permanent niche somewhere in the American market for what we have to offer. We have learned something from attempting this operation and we hope modestly that American advertisers may have learned a little too."

CBS's 'Greek Grapevine'

CBS Sports will be adding a new dimension to its program "The NFL Today" with the addition of Jimmy "The Greek" Snyder, oddsmaker and sports analyst, who will analyze football games to be played on that particular day and explain why certain teams are favored. He will not be giving point spreads or predictions but will be stopping just ever so short of being television's first official tout.

Mr. Snyder's four-minute segment called "The Greek's Grapevine" will be sponsored by the Consolidated Cigar Corporation, a Gulf and Western Company, at a cost of about $500,000. The cigar company seems to have locked on to these minisports presentations. Last year it was the "NFL Armwrestling Championship" during NFL games and "Red Auerbach on Roundball" during National Basketball Association games.

While there is an official NFL ban against betting, Consolidated Cigar and CBS seem to believe that in the real world of the viewer and smoker there are some who like to place a friendly wager.

The cigar company will be pushing its Dutch Master and Muriel cigars durthe minisegment. That you can bet on.

RCA Drive on CB's

The RCA Distributor and Special Products Division of the RCA Corporation will be promoting its line of citizens band radio with a $2.7 million advertising campaign scheduled to begin in October and run through 1977.

The campaign, created by the division's ad agency, Al Paul Lefton, will use television—around network sports programs—and trade and special-interest publications. The advertising theme will be "RCA CB Co-Pilot—Now Your'e Talking!"

Not since the mid-sixties has RCA had a line of CB radios. "It just wasn't going anyplace at that time," said a company spokesman. Now there are as many as 60 or 70 different brands, and this is where RCA hopes to cash in —the familiar RCA handle.

Agency for TreeSweet

The TreeSweet Products Company of Santa Ana, Calif., processors and marketers of citrus juices and other drinks, have named Botsford Ketchum Inc. of San Francisco as its new ad agency. The previous agency was Clinton E. Frank.

TreeSweet, a division of the DiGiorgio Corporation, plans to spend $3 million in advertising next year. That should satisfy any agency's sweet tooth.

Robert B. Funkhouser, director of advertising for the Carnation Company, elected a director of the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

SELIGMAN & LATZ TO DROP AMEX LISTING ON SEPT. 15

Seligman & Latz Inc., a New York-based operator of a chain of beauty salons, said yesterday that it would drop its American Stock Exchange listing on Sept. 15 when its New York Stock Exchange listing begins.

A company spokesman said the company doesn't see "any particular advantage" in dual trading of its stock.

OUR TEXANS KNOW MORE ABOUT PLANES THAN PLAINS

Texas. The mere mention of the word evokes images of longhorns, holsters and "Howdy pardner, this here yer first cattle drive?".

Well that formula might have been fine a century or so ago, but today it's obsolete.

And emerging from it all has come a new breed of Texan.

More intelligent. More affluent. More cosmopolitan.

Today's Texans are our Texans.

A paid circulation of 200,000, and almost 1,000,000 readers, who spend an average of 103 minutes with each issue of one of the fastest growing magazines in America.

Just who is this new breed?

They're young. Almost 60 percent of Texas Monthly subscribers are in the acquisitive 25 to 49 year old bracket.

They're educated. Almost two-thirds are college graduate in a state where only one in fi attend college.

And they're financially able. T annual median income for subscriber families is $25,600 two and a half times the Texa average. And on the average, percent took six airline round trips last year, while 31 perce currently have a valid passpor

What does all this mean to advertisers? An attentive bloc consumers consuming in the n vibrant economic market in th country today.

Who is this man?

The face is familiar—the pale blue eyes that caress or stab; the smile held endlessly by some secret isometric; the thatch of graying rust hair, blow-dried and spray-held; the skin still sun-cured under the banquet-room pallor.

It is primer knowledge that he comes from a Georgia boondock called Plains; that he trained at Annapolis and officered on nuclear submarines; that he has governed Georgia, made four-fifths of a million in peanuts and spent nearly two years running full-time for President.

Yet, for most of America, he has progressed merely from Jimmy Who? to Jimmy What?

This week Newsweek sizes up Carter—the front runner and the unknown.

In a special 22-page report (to be followed soon by a comparable appraisal of President Ford's two years in the Oval Office), Newsweek examines the man behind the Sunday-school manner and the peanut-patch accent, following him from child of the Bible Belt to bionic candidate.

What kind of a White House would Carter run? What are his startling ideas for the first six months? Who would be the key men in a Carter administration?

Look for the answers in this week's Newsweek. It's an issue filled with the kind of editorial excitement that attracts 19,000,000 readers each week—and, over the past eight years, more advertising pages than any other newsweekly.

Profound Effects on Leasing Seen in Accounting Changes

By CARTER B. HORSLEY

Accountants are turning the lights on leases in a way that could lean to a demand by commercial tenants, among others, for shorter-term obligations.

The Financial Accounting Standards Board, which sets the rules for the industry, recently drafted new regulations that are expected to affect substantially the balance sheets of many companies that depend heavily on leasing, such as airlines, utilities, retail store chains, the computer industry, and, not least of all, real estate.

The new rules, which have been issued for comment until Oct. 1 and are scheduled to go into effect Jan. 1, are designed, according to a spokesman for the board, which is headquartered in Stamford, Conn., to bring a degree of uniformity to the reporting of leases in financial statements.

The concern of accountants is that major assets, such as jumbo jets, supertankers, heavy equipment, or plants, often have not appeared on anyone's books. In recent years, leasing as a means of acquiring the right to use property has proliferated greatly and pressures have increased to reflect more fully the nature and magnitude of such activity so that investors can more readily determine the scope of financial commitments and impact on net income.

A few years ago, the Securities and Exchange Commission began to address the problem by requiring that many such leased assets be disclosed. As a result, some details have begun to appear in footnotes in financial statements. The proposed new rules by the Financial Accounting Standards Board, go much further and require that many of these leased properties now appear as assets and liabilities on balance sheets.

For many companies, the effect of such accounting changes will be dramatically reflected in their liabilities. Normally, rents appear as operational costs. Under the new rules, however, the leased property is capitalized as an asset against which depreciation and interest payments must be made, resulting possibly in a lower net income report.

For commercial real estate, the proposed regulations, according to some consultants, investors and accountants, may have significant long-range effects.

"It's a sure thing," according to Peter E. Pattison, a leading real estate consultant here, to create pressures on some companies, "who don't like an increase in their liabilities which impedes their ability to raise equity to seek shorter term bases."

Most major leases for office, or industrial, or commercial, space here have traditionally been for periods of 10 to 20 years or longer. Short-term leases, which obviously represent a smaller capitalization, usually run for three to 10 years. Mr. Pattison observed that the short-term lease is prevalent in many other locations and to a large extent is a function of supply and demand. Nonetheless, he said, that the impact of the regulations on the New York City speculative builder could be major, for a demand for short-term leases would tend to drive up rents and possibly lead to a restructuring of much long-term real estate financing which is geared closely to long-term leasing.

Benjamin V. Lambert, the head of Eastdil Realty Inc., observed that the regulations would make it "virtually impossible for a corporation to keep new obligations off the balance sheet." He said his firm was now involved in "brainstorming" new kinds of real estate financing to offset some of the impact of the regulations.

The short-term lease is not expected to be an easy solution for lessees in many instances because it may necessitate higher occupancy and more moving costs, Mr. Lambert said. Lewis Rudin of the Rudin Management Company said that for many commercial tenants, especially in the present office market, long-term leases can offer better security, greater economic leverage and be simply "a better business decision."

Some companies have already begun to re-examine their lease commitments with an eye toward the balance sheet. One concern, Mr. Pattison said, just renewed a large lease for office space for a long term but insisted on an early cancellation option that carried with it stiff penalties. Stanley Weiss of the accounting firm of Clarence Rainess & Company, said that many companies had queried his firm in recent weeks about the regulations, which he described as "highly complex and in keeping with present accounting trends away from historical reports to economic realities, to actual substance over form."

According to the heads of the real estate departments of several leading insurance companies and banks, the new regulations are not likely to influence their lending attitudes towards companies because their financial analysis already go beyond printed financial statements. For the less sophisticated analyst or stockholder or potential investor, the regulations, however, may cause "severe shocks," according to one banker.

The board's regulations "derive from the view that a lease that transfers substantially all of the benefits and risks incident to the ownership of property should be accounted for as the acquisition of an asset and the incurrence of an obligation by the lease, and as a sale or financing by the lessor." The regulations would apply to both parties.

Under the proposed regulations, all leases would have to be reported in the aggregate that transfer ownership at the end of the lease term, or contain "bargain purchase options," or have terms equal to 75 percent or more of the estimated economic life of the leased property, or have a present value equal to 90 percent or more of the fair value of the leased property.

Starting Monday, September 13, classified advertising can be ordered full run, Monday through Friday, in The New York Times

National classified presents a new sales opportunity for all classifications from apartments to situations wanted, including auction sales, business opportunities, help wanted, merchandise offerings and real estate.

Classified advertisements and auction sales normally appear in 700,000 copies of The New York Times distributed in New York City, its suburbs and surrounding territory.

Starting September 13, and for only 70 cents a line added to the already established classification rate (commissionable), your advertising can be included in all 900,000 copies of the weekday New York Times distributed coast to coast.

This means that classified advertisers can reach all 2,342,000 weekday readers of The New York Times in the New York area—plus 598,000 more readers in other cities and towns across the United States. People to whom you could sell a house, rent an apartment or room, invite to apply for a job, attend an auction, invest money or time or buy whatever you sell.

For more information, write or call your Times advertising sales representative . . . or call (212) OX 5-3311 . . . or call the Classified regional office nearest you.

The New York Times/Don Hogan Charles

Commercial Overshadows Senate Race

Controversy over 30 seconds of radio time continued to overshadow an entire day of campaigning by the five Democratic candidates for the United States Senate from New York yesterday.

The dispute concerns a radio commercial that one of the candidates, Representative Bella S. Abzug, withdrew last week after conceding that it contained errors. Yesterday, Daniel P. Moynihan, another of the candidates, whom the Abzug commercial had attacked for his role in the administration of former President Richard M. Nixon, asked the Fair Campaign Practices Committee in Washington to investigate the making of the commercial.

"I expect them to find that a fraudulent, doctored, tampered tape was used," Mr. Moynihan, the former United States representative to the United Nations, told a news conference.

White House or Hotel?

The commercial, which was produced for the Abzug campaign by the Communications Company, opens with a narrator saying: "The following tape comes to you from the Nixon White House." Mr. Nixon is then heard introducing Mr. Moynihan as his adviser on urban and domestic affairs.

But the event on the tape actually took place not at the White House, but at the Pierre Hotel in New York City, a month before Mr. Nixon's inauguration.

Mrs. Abzug yesterday said she "deplored" the mistake, and accused Mr. Moynihan of "just trying to make this into something beyond what it really is."

The dispute broke out early in the morning, at the taping of a candidates' debate for broadcast on seven radio stations in the state. Paul O'Dwyer, the City Council President and another of the candidates, raised the issue, saying that the error was serious enough to require further investigation.

Mr. Moynihan then asked Ramsey Clark, the former United States Attorney General and still another Senate candidate, to conduct such an investigation. "Let me decline the honor," an obviously startled Mr. Clark replied. He later accused Mr. Moynihan and Mrs. Abzug of conducting an "undignified" campaign that consisted mostly of "bickering."

The Fair Campaign Practices Committee has not yet decided whether to investigate the incident.

Meanwhile, with exactly a week to go before the Sept. 14 primary, the candidates conducted themselves yesterday in the following ways:

Mrs. Abzug

Mrs. Abzug's day took her from an indoor rally in the garment district, where several hundred active and retired members of the Store Workers Union greeted with loud applause her bittersweet memories of being hired after graduation from Hunter College in 1942 to demonstrate how to tie turbans in a department store, to the Grand Concourse in the Bronx, where she campaigned with Representative Jonathan B. Bingham.

In between, she was made an honorary member of Eddie Condon's All-Star Jazz Band, and surprised herself as well as customers at the late guitar player's jazz club with a pleasant rendition of "Melancholy Baby" on the mandolin.

Mrs. Abzug also announced that she had been endorsed by Leonard Woodcock, president of the United Auto Workers, and released a position paper on crime in which she accused the Federal Bureau of Investigation of "interfering with our business" and harassing small dissident groups instead of concentrating its resources against organized crime.

LINDA GREENHOUSE

Moynihan

There were three items on the sheet of yellow legal paper that Mr. Moynihan put on the chair in front of him as he sprawled on a wooden camp chair for a news conference in his volunteer headquarters at 1130 Avenue of the Americas. "Leading. Welfare—$60B. Tapes." He discoursed briefly on each, as follows:

¶"The first item is that I expect to win."

¶He telephoned an adviser to Jimmy Carter, the Democratic Presidential nominee, about his fears that Mr. Carter, as President, might defer changes in the welfare system and was assured, he said, that the Carter calculations showed an expansion in Federal revenue over four years of $60 billion. "If he doesn't let himself get nickeled and dimed to death," Mr. Moynihan said of Mr. Carter, "that means he has the resource to do the two big-ticket items." Those items are welfare change and national health insurance, Mr. Moynihan said.

¶He asked the fair-campaign officials to investigate the Abzug tapes. Why, since the commercial had been withdrawn? "It was still playing yesterday," Mr. Moynihan said, "and it says something about the character of the campaign."

The Moynihan campaign people believe that the total tone of the opposition—Mrs. Abzug's statement, since modified, that she would not support Mr. Moynihan if he won, the tape controversy, the pie that was shoved into Mr. Moynihan's face the other day—is working to the benefit of Mr. Moynihan, who cultivates an image of polite attention to the issues.

MAURICE CARROLL

Clark

Ramsey Clark, took Mrs. Abzug and Mr. Moynihan to task yesterday, declaring that they had waged a campaign that began with "self-promotion" and was ending with each of them attacking the other.

Seated in his campaign offices at 505 Fifth Avenue and under the admiring eyes of his campaign workers and supporters Mr. Clark observed that at a time when the nation faced an "incredible range of enormously difficult problems," his opponents' "destructive attacks and political posturing replace a constructive dialogue."

On the other hand, he said, his campaign had focused on the issues. He pointed to stacks of his 94-page "Citizens Agenda," computer printouts of the 13,000 under-$100 contributions to his campaign, copies of his 16 position papers and duplicates of the voter registration forms of persons controlled by his campaigners, all arrayed on a table.

Behind him, attached to a bulletin board, were montages of newspaper headlines captured by Mrs. Abzug and Mr. Moynihan because of their recent attacks on each other. Next to that was a montage of headlines concerning Mr. Clark, all relating his positions on issues.

He called for a "permanent truce on truculence" in the campaign and for Mrs. Abzug and Mr. Moynihan to "tell us not who they are against, but what they are for."

RONALD SMOTHERS

O'Dwyer

Mr. O'Dwyer sounded a theme similar to Mr. Clark's in an address before the Fund for New Priorities, but his emphasis was on the impact that the disputes between Mrs. Abzug and Mr. Moynihan would have on forging the kind of Democratic Party unity needed to defeat United States Senator James L. Buckley, should he be the Republican candidate.

"With these kind of charges," he said, referring to the controversy over the Abzug radio commercial and the question of whether the unsuccessful candidate of the two would support the other, "there can be little unity after the primary."

Later, speaking before the East Midwood Hadassah at the East Midwood Jewish Center in Brooklyn, Mr. O'Dwyer said the main issues of the campaign were ending unemployment, federalization of welfare, developing a foreign policy and defense policy that does not destroy freedom elsewhere in the world and eradicating the crime and drug addiction that has eroded the quality of life.

Hirschfeld

Abraham Hirschfeld was in Rochester yesterday, calling for a program of reforms aimed at the social, physical, economic well-being of elderly New Yorkers.

Mr. Hirschfeld proposed that Social Security and Supplemental Security Income Maintenance, which aid the elderly, include "automatic cost-of-living increases." He proposed as well an expansion of the Medicare programs, providing the cost of medical care for the elderly and reforms that would control costs.

In addition, he favored free use of public transportation for the elderly and low-income people in addition to the city and state subsidies now available.

Hirschfeld Has Spent $465,000 of His Own Money

By FRANK LYNN

Abraham Hirschfeld, who is generally believed to be trailing in the five-way race for the Democratic nomination for the United States Senator from New York State has already spent at least $465,000 of his own money on his campaign—more than most of his opponents have raised for their entire campaign.

Mr. Hirschfeld's spending highlighted the latest campaign financial reports filed by the candidates—reports that were noteworthy for their details of low budget operations in comparison to recent New York campaigns.

As of last weekend, the five Democrats reported the following campaign receipts: Mr. Hirschfeld, $615,000; Representative Bella S. Abzug, $470,000; Daniel P. Moynihan, $375,000; Ramsey Clark, $245,000, and City Council President Paul O'Dwyer, about $190,000, the lowest of the five although he is the Democratic State Committee designee for the Senate nomination.

In contrast, Senator James L. Buckley, the Republican incumbent, has raised more than $1.2 million, much of it already squirreled away for election campaign television advertising. His opponent in the Republican primary, Representative Peter A. Peyser of Westchester, is the low man in the fund-raising department, with less than $100,000.

Other highlights of the Democratic finance reports that covered the two-month period through last week included the following:

¶Mr. Moynihan, a former United States representative to the United Nations, had the largest number of $1,000 contributors—96—while Mrs. Abzug followed with 42. That sum is the maximum contribution permitted an individual other than the candidate.

¶Mr. Hirschfeld, a Manhattan businessman, had only 23 contributors other than himself. Mr. O'Dwyer had to lend $30,000 of his own money to keep his campaign afloat.

¶The New York Telephone Company was a major beneficiary of the campaigns—$114,490 in billings and deposits from the five Democrats for the last two months. Mr. Hirschfeld alone spent $36,000 for deposits to install 60 telephones being used to canvass potential voters.

¶Each of the candidates has paid staffs ranging up to Mr. Moynihan's 40-member staff. The salaries range up to the $1,000 a week paid to Mr. Moynihan's campaign manager, Meyer S. Frucher. The other campaign managers are paid in the $350 to $500 per week range or nothing as in the case of Charles Keith, Mr. O'Dwyer's friend and campaign manager.

¶Mr. Clark, a former United States Attorney General, has also paid at least $15,700 to a political consultant, Martilla, Piane, Kiley & Thorne of Boston, for campaign strategy. The firm also handled the unsuccessful bid of Representative Morris K. Udall, Democrat of Arizona, for the Democratic Presidential nomination.

¶A top campaign aide to Mrs. Abzug, Harold Holzer, is on the Federal payroll as a $17,000-a-year administrative assistant to Mrs. Abzug. Mr. Holzer said on Saturday that he only worked weekends and evenings at the Abzug campaign headquarters, but when reached at the campaign headquarters yesterday he said that he had applied for a Federal leave without pay for the final week of the campaign.

YESTERDAY 2 P.M. SEPTEMBER 7, 1976

Cold front: a boundary between cold air and warmer air, under which the colder air pushes like a wedge, usually south and east.

Warm front: a boundary between warm air and a retreating wedge of colder air over which the warm air is forced as it advances, usually north and east.

Occluded front: a line along which warm air was lifted by opposing wedges of cold air, often causing precipitation.

Shaded areas indicate precipitation.

Dash lines show forecast afternoon maximum temperatures.

Isobars are lines (solid black) of equal barometric pressure (in inches), forming air-flow patterns.

Winds are counterclockwise toward the center of low-pressure systems, clockwise outward from high-pressure areas. Pressure systems usually move east.

TV: British Fare on WOR Ranges From Giddiness to Pertinence

By JOHN J. O'CONNOR

"Thames on 9" is turning out to be the most intriguing television project of the year. While WOR/Channel 9 provides Thames Television with a Monday-through-Friday showcase for its better productions, the New York metropolitan area is being afforded an invaluable glimpse of what can be found in Britain, at least occasionally, on the single commercial channel that competes with the British Broadcasting Corporation.

The American arrangement gets under way daily at 5:30 P.M. with a program for children. At 6, London's glib Eamonn Andrews, interviewing assorted personalities in New York, and New York's droll Dick Cavett, visiting London, are hooked up live by satellite for an exchange of light chatter. The proceedings Monday threatened to disintegrate into a complete giddiness as the various personalities greeted each other across the Atlantic ("Hello, Lynnie." Carroll Baker shouted cheerfully to Lynn Redgrave in New York). But New York's Mayor Beame remained deadly serious when confronted with any seeming criticism of the city's fiscal crisis. Mr. Beame, as we were reminded several times, was born in London.

Again via satellite, the Thames 11:30 P.M. London edition of the news is transmitted here at 6:30, its 15 minutes, without commercials, concentrating on a no-nonsense survey of national and international events, from the Labor Day opening of Jimmy Carter's campaign to the Zurich meeting between Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa, both of whom were seen making brief statements to the press. The Thames "news reader" noted that neither managed to say anything of substance or significance.

One of the more pertinent contributions of "Thames on 9" to correcting general misimpressions is the conclusive evidence that British television can be as silly and innocuous as its American counterpart. At 7 o'clock each night this week, there is a situation comedy entitled "Father Dear Father," which might be subtitled "Father Does Not Know Best." The foil in this case is a divorced mystery writer with two teenage daughters. Monday's episode featured daddy with a toothache, one daughter with a see-through blouse, the other with an accident-prone boyfriend, and some unbelievable confusion over a dentist and a plumber. Everyone worked much too hard to no discernible purpose.

"Rock Follies," written by American-born Howard Schuman, doesn't waste anything. A deliriously perceptive commentary on the lunacy and infuriating lovability of show business, the mini-series consists of six hours, two of them included in "Thames on 9" this week. Monday's episode got the three central characters—stage actresses all—together for a disastrous revival of a stage musical called "Broadway Annie." This evening the women—played to withering perfection by Julia Covington, Charlotte Cornwell and Rula Lenska—join the music director of the show and plot a new career as a kind of soft-punk rock group called "Little Ladies."

The peculiar world of the performers and the machinations of show business are perceived hilariously and mercilessly. One actress copes with her penury in the suffocating protection of a commune. Another argues about the great literature of the theater with her melancholy boyfriend, who insists on being compulsively illuminating. The third "keeps" an American surfer, who exercises continuously under ultraviolet lights while she struggles for a living with a producer of porno movies ("some bondage, a little lez, maybe a little bestiality," he explains blandly). And all of this is marching inexorably to immense success in the rock scene, where the cardinal rule is, "Sing from your groin, not your head." Mr. Schuman and his delightful company of players have played the scene well and wickedly.

"Thames on 9" is not all heavy scheduling. There are numerous passing moments that manage to startle, including bits and pieces from several of the British commercials also imported for the occasion. Mr. Cavett's interview with the Lord Mayor of London could have been plucked from "Monty Python's Flying Circus" for its underlying tone of amiable eccentricity.

The Presidential Debates and Network Frustrations

By LES BROWN

News Analysis

Although the commercial networks have sought televised debates between the major candidates for every Presidential election since that of 1960, their purposes have been more frustrated than fulfilled by the agreement between President Ford and Jimmy Carter to meet in a series of televised debates this fall under the sponsorship of the League of Women Voters.

Indeed these debates, because of the legal means by which they have been arranged, represent a severe setback for the broadcast industry in its 17-year drive for repeal of Section 315 of the Communications Act, which contains the so-called equal-time rule. Broadcasters have maintained that this rule—which requires television and radio to grant all legally qualified candidates for an office equal access to the air—hampers their ability to cover politics.

Even after Mr. Ford and Mr. Carter accepted the proposal from the league, CBS and NBC made last-ditch attempts to persuade Congressional leaders that the viewers and candidates would be better served if the forthcoming debates were held in the same manner as the Kennedy-Nixon television debates of 1960.

The four debates in 1960 betwen John F. Kennedy and Richard M. Nixon had been made possible by a suspension of Section 315 just for that year and only for the Presidential race.

After securing agreements from the candidates for the series of joint appearances on television, the networks importuned Congress to repeal the law but won instead the one-year suspension in the spirit of a test.

This year's Presidential race had seemed to afford the opportunity for another test—perhaps even the final one—but that evaporated when the league made its successful propoal to the candidates.

The move by the nonpartisan organization was prompted by a new interpretation of the equal-time law, issued by the Federal Communications Commission last fall. The commission ruled that radio and television may cover debates between major party candidates, without being subject to equal-time requirements, if the debates are held outside television studios and are arranged by oganizations other than the broadcasters.

This, the commission held, made them legitimate news events suitable for coverage. But it added the requirement that the debates be covered live and in their entirety, rather than in edited form.

The networks now find themselves in the curious position of being obliged to cover a series of events, the effect of which may be exactly the opposite of what the broadcast industry had hoped to achieve. For if the league-sponsored debates prove to be a satisfactory way for candidates to meet face to face on television, they will indicate that repeal of Section 315 is unnecessary.

Hoping to prevent such a reverse test, CBS prepared a memorandum for members of Congress detailing reasons why it believed another suspension of Section 315 would "serve the interests of the American electorate" better than the arrangement with the League of Women Voters.

Suspect in the Kidnapping Of L.I. Business Executive Is Arrested in California

By ROY R. SILVER

Special to The New York Times

MINEOLA, L.I., Sept. 7—A California man has been arrested for allegedly kidnapping a wealthy Kings Point, L.I., business executive 22 months ago and releasing him unharmed after the payment of a $750,000 ransom.

J. Wallace La Prade, assistant director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in charge of the New York office, and Daniel P. Guido, the Nassau County Police Commissioner, said today that the man was arrested yesterday in Barstow, Calif. The suspect, Richard Warren Williams, 43 years old, of Pacoima, a suburb of Los Angeles, was seized in connection with the Nov. 12, 1974, kidnapping of Jack J. Teich from outside his home.

Mr. Williams waived the use of an attorney, and a preliminary hearing was set for Sept. 16 in Federal District Court in Los Angeles. He was held in lieu of $500,000 bail.

Suspect a Realty Broker

Mr. Williams, a real estate broker who is married and has five children, was arraigned before a United States magistrate in Barstow today on a Federal charge of extortion. This evening, two Nassau County detectives, Richard McGuire and James Moran, both of whom had been involved in the investigation, flew to California with a warrant for the arrest of the defendant on a charge of kidnapping.

At the time of his arrest, the law enforcement officials said Mr. Williams had $10,300 in $100 bills that reportedly was part of the ransom money.

Mr. Teich, who is part-owner of the Acme Steel Partition Company in Brooklyn, was kidnapped from the driveway of his home at 2 Ballantine Lane by two armed men wearing masks.

He was then held chained in a closet for a week until his family, after a series of telephone communications with the kidnappers, placed the ransom m[illegible] a locker in Pennsylvania Station.

F.B.I. agents observed a man [illegible] up the money from the locker, [illegible] escaped aboard a subway train [illegible] the agents were concerned abou[illegible] people in the area and the need t[illegible] cautiously.

A Dime loan makes higher education easier.

- New, low 11% rate.
- Money as you need it: save with two advances a year.

Now the Dime's educational loan rate is a full percentage point lower than before. That's right for either our College Guaranty Plan where you make one loan arrangement that covers the full 4 years or the Scholastic Loan Plan designed to help you meet current scholastic expenses. The annual percentage rate on both loans has been reduced to 11% a year and that includes life insurance to a qualified borrower who has not reached age 65 on the effective date of the loan.

Dime loans are tailored to your needs also. Borrow up to $20,000 outstanding at any one time to send your children to elementary, preparatory, vocational school or college. Take the money as you need it for each semester so you're not paying unnecessary interest costs. And spread monthly payments over as long as a 7-year period if you wish.

If your income is $15,000 or more a year, or if the income of all members of your family adds up to this amount, you qualify to apply for one of these loans.

See how Dime's lower rate saves you money.

42 MILLION IMPRESSIONS A WEEK CAN KEEP YOUR AWARENESS UP BETWEEN FLIGHTS.

Scheduling television advertising in flights, waves, blocks, or whatever term you use, makes good economic sense. But what do you do between flights?

The answer is print, but the magazine audiences you can reach quickly are mostly rather small. It takes a month or two or three for most magazines to accumulate their audience.

Only TV Guide can deliver an audience big enough and fast enough to keep your awareness up between flights. 42.2 million adult readers per issue. And you can reach almost all of them in 10 days.

With TV Guide you get the scheduling flexibility that only a weekly can offer plus the size and efficiency you used to work with in broadcast. So you can plan your advertising the way you want to—with massive reach and the opportunity for frequency only a weekly can provide.

TV Guide. To keep your sales flying between flights.
